Nazi Drives Lessen Near Moscow, But Gain in South

Fewer Attacks Reported; Push Continues Into Donets Basin

By the Associated Press

Hitler's major offensive upon Moscow came to the end of its first month last night with an apparent sharp decline in power, but there was much to indicate that in the Far South the German drives still were generally unhalted.

At the center, where the weary Nazi armies still stood well short of the capital, Soviet dispatches declared that German action had fallen to mere local attacks in all sectors save for the Volokolamsk area, some 65 miles to the northwest where fighting still was reported heavy. Of that whole theater the German high command significantly continued its utter silence.

But in the south, where this time the Soviet command was silent, the Germans claimed the Russians were in retreat on two major fronts—southward into the Crimean Peninsula and eastward in the Donets Basin in the area about and above Rostov on the River Don.

[The United Press reported Germans had crashed through the [illegible] of Tula, city of 200,000 and only 110 miles south of Moscow, and fighting is raging in its suburbs.]

And where the invaders stood was not stated in either instance; as to Rostov it seemed most likely that they were near its very suburbs and thus close to the entrance to the Russian Caucasus.

All this suggested the likelihood that the last decision for Moscow might be long delayed—perhaps even through the winter on a relatively static front—while Hitler was putting all his pressure on the south in an effort to reach Caucasian oil, block the British-American supply route, running up from Iran, and—in the Crimea—to knock out the greatest southern Soviet naval base at Sevastopol.

It seemed possible, in fact, that the current dimunition of the offensive against Moscow might be explained in part by the shifting of forces southward.

[In London the Daily Express reported Germany has mobilized all her military resources for a tremendous assault on Moscow, Rostov and the Crimea, International News Service reported.]

The war in Russia, in any event, had reached one of those brief periods of a hard, uneasy twilight, where the shadows of things that might come were long across the world and dimmed the harsh perspective of the struggle in the east.

Meanwhile, N. B. C.'s correspondent in Manila cabled that "unconfirmed, but persistent rumors in Manila say that the Japanese army already has crossed the border into Thailand."

Three Deaths in a Day

Auto Kills Unidentified Boy Wearing Halloween Outfit

Traffic deaths this year 79
Deaths this time last year 58
Total deaths last year 79

A boy about 10 years old lay dead last night on a slab in the District Morgue, dressed in a "Lone Ranger" cowboy suit, with a Halloween mask in his sweater pocket and the expectant expression of the Halloween frolic still on his face.

At 2 a. m. the police had not learned his name. He was like thousands of other boys on the streets last night—a red-haired youngster out for fun—but on the records he was Washington's second traffic fatality of the day, the seventy-eighth for the year. Later in the day a man was killed, bringing the total to date up to the number killed for the entire year of 1940.

The child was struck by a skidding sedan at Bladensburg Road and Eastern Avenue Northeast, at 3:20 p. m. His small, gayly dressed body was hurled 40 feet into an adjoining field above a 4-foot embankment by the twisting car which, almost simultaneously, crashed against a telegraph pole and caught fire. He was dead on arrival at Casualty Hospital.

Charles J. Divirgilio, 28, of Marshalltown, Del., the driver, suffered head injuries. He told police he was northbound on Bladensburg Road, "keeping up with the other traffic," when the sedan went into a skid. Herbert Weldin, jr., 22, of Washington, Del., riding with Divirgilio, said he didn't know whether the driver applied the brakes. The car, he said, took a three-quarter spin and went out of control.

But nobody last night knew who the boy was. He was, as best as can be deduced, waiting for the streets to fill up with the confetti-throwing crowds. He possibly had gone from his home, wherever it is, to get the feeling of what the night would bring—before the night fell, or, perhaps, he was coming from Halloween activities at school. Why his parents failed to call could only be conjectured.

He was standing about 3 feet in-

Do You Know This Boy?

The unidentified boy instantly killed at Bladensburg Road and Eastern Avenue yesterday was about 10 years old. He weighed 70 pounds, had light red hair, blue eyes, fair complexion. He was 4 feet 6 inches tall.

He wore a cowboy suit which included light brown riding pants, boots, a light gray sweater, a gray belt. A blue Halloween kerchief was tied around his neck. In his pocket was a Halloween mask.

Air Associates Plant Hums Under Army

Bulk of Workers Returning; Shipyard Strike Is Settled

By the Associated Press

Bendix, N. J., Oct. 31.—The bayonet-encircled plant of Air Associates, Inc., hummed tonight with defense production under guard of 2100 soldiers who poured into the strike-torn area during the early morning.

"The machines are turning in the shop and shipments already have been made of critical material," Col. Roy M. Jones, Army Air Corps officer in charge of Federal operation of the aircraft factory announced.

Shipyard Strike Settled

In New York, a five-day strike of 5,800 workers which plunged the busy Robins Drydock & Repair Co. Brooklyn shipyards into inactivity was settled today when the firm and the Industrial Marine and Shipbuilding Workers Union (C. I. O.) agreed on wage increases which the membership ratified.

Sydney Beanland, union president, said the men would be at their jobs Monday, repairing 14 British and American ships, and would continue working while the National Mediation Board determined the exact port rate of wages. This, the union contended, was 78 cents an hour, somewhat higher than the scale provided in the new pact.

The ships, intended to carry supplies to Britain and Russia, included a United States Navy transport, the

Bill Seeks Pay Increase for Armed Forces

Senate Measure Would Raise Army Base to $42 a Month

By the Associated Press

Legislation providing broad adjustments in pay for all persons in the armed services, at an estimated additional cost of $374,333,578 annually, was introduced yesterday by a Senate Military Affairs subcommittee.

The bulky measure, which would raise pay for enlisted men and officers of the Army, Navy and Marines was offered by Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, chairman of the subcommittee, after extensive study by an interdepartmental committee representing the armed services, the Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey and Public Health Service.

The interdepartmental committee approved the proposed pay adjustments unanimously, but noted that the increases could not be regarded as official recommendations of the various departments.

The proposed over-all increases would be distributed as follows: Army, $272,810,230; Navy, $62,110,045; Marine Corps, $11,779,023; Coast Guard, $7,122,365; Coast and Geodetic Survey, $106,812, and Public Health Service, $403,103.

The committee recommended that the base pay for lowest ranking enlisted men, such as the army private, be raised to $42 a month, with elimination of the Selective Service Act provision for an automatic $10 monthly increase after a year's serv-

4 D. C. Officers Promoted

Roosevelt Names Col. Cramer Judge Advocate General

Col. Myron C. Cramer was nominated by President Roosevelt yesterday to be the Army's judge advocate general for a term of four years with the rank of major general.

President Roosevelt at the same time nominated two other officers for advancement to major general and 20 to brigadier general, to fill existing Army vacancies.

Col. Cramer succeeds Maj. Gen. Allen W. Gullion, who has been named provost marshal general. Cramer's home is Tacoma, Wash.

Named for promotion to major general were Brig. Gen. Russell P. Hartle, acting commander of the Thirty-fifth Infantry Division, and Brig. Gen. Walter H. Frank, commander of the Third Air Forces Interceptor Command with headquarters at Tampa, Fla. Gen. Hartle's home is Hagerstown, Md. Gen. Frank, a native of Humphrey, N. Y., lists his home as Washington, D. C.

Those promoted to brigadier general included two from the National Guard, Lieut. Col. Harry Johnson, Houston, Tex., and Col. David P. Hardy, San Francisco, Calif. Others: Cols. William H. Gill, Unison, Va.; Joseph D. Patch, Washington, D. C.; Frank C. Mahin, Washington, D. C.; Harold F. Loomis, Rockville, Conn.; Dale D. Hinman, Austin, Tex.; Col. John S. Wood, Little Rock, Ark.

Lange, St. Paul, Minn.; Thompson Lawrence, New York City; Waldo C. Potter, Casselton, N. Dak.; Edwin P. Parker, Wytheville, Va.; Charles Millikan, Houlton, Me.

Lieutenant colonels nominated to be brigadier generals were Leroy Lutes, Cairo, Ill., and Elmer E. Adler, Buffalo, N. Y.

Coal Strife Hearings Set Monday

11 Mediators Will Consider Lewis' Closed Shop Demands

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

The National Defense Mediation Board, setting Monday for the beginning of proceedings before an 11-man "jury" of its members, to decide on John L. Lewis' demand for a union shop in "captive" coal fields, laid its plans yesterday in an atmosphere of controversy and trouble.

A full board meeting, attended by the unprecedented number of 31 out of the 39 members and alternates, was marked by criticism of past procedure in the dispute and was accompanied by an angry interchange of messages between Lewis and Board Chairman William H. Davis, in which Davis inferentially accused the C. I. O. mine workers' president of breaking his word and putting pressure on the board.

Following yesterday's meeting, Davis told reporters that all the principals to the dispute—the union and the Nation's major steel companies which own the captive collieries—had been invited to be present and present their cases at 10 a. m. Monday.

11 Men to Vote

The discussions will proceed before all board members and alternates who desire to attend, Davis added, but explained that the final vote will be made by the 11-man body. Throughout the proceedings, however, there will be alternates present so that if any member of the original group is "unavailable" at the time the vote is taken, an alternate who has heard the full proceedings can take his place.

The voting group, Davis said, will be the original 11 men appointed to the board at the time of its creation last March, except that one labor member, George H. Harrison, president of the A. F. of L. Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, will be replaced with an alternate, William A. Calvin, vice president of the A. F. of L. boilermakers.

Harrison has been in ill health and has not been active on the board.

Assails Strike Call

Preproceeding hostilities with Lewis were begun by Davis, who implied in a letter to the union leader that Lewis' setting of an automatic strike date on November 15 was not contemplated or sanctioned in the terms of the President's agreement that ended the

Veteran Learns Of Promotion 23 Years After War

A man who served in the World War in France as a United States Army corporal discovered yesterday to his surprise that he was actually a sergeant, but never had been officially informed of his promotion.

Stephen T. Eide, port captain of Ilwaco, Wash., who is visiting here in connection with "city business," checked on his World War record with the aid of Congressman Martin Smith, of Washington, out of curiosity. He had lost his copy in France.

He discovered a promotion warrant filed in the adjutant general's office with his service record, showing that it had never been delivered. Eide served 11 months in France and was mustered out of service in 1919.

Witching Hour Strike Halts Troika Fun

Just at the stroke of midnight when the Halloween show was to start at the Troika Club, 1011 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, the entire staff of restaurant employes walked out on strike.

Scores of diners in evening dress sat at their tables with empty glasses. Those who arrived late for a midnight snack went without wine and food. They had come to celebrate, in frolicsome mood. But they just sat there, looking sheepish and ill at ease with the funny-looking paper hats cocked on their heads.

The strikers, including waiters, cooks, busboys and busboys, then started to picket the club, each carrying a sign around his neck: "Troika on Strike!"

Mrs. Helen Hamilton, owner of the club, said:

"We have tried to negotiate with the employes for two months. We offered to pay them as much as any of the highest class restaurants in the city. But they demanded increases of more than 100 per cent. Then they walked out on us without warning."

Sinking Fails To Spur Move On Repealer

Sen. Maloney Blocks Call for Immediate Vote on Modifying Neutrality Act

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Axis sinking of the destroyer Reuben James stirred Congress yesterday to mingled calls for retaliation and cautions to "keep cool" but failed to prod the Senate into immediate modification of the Neutrality Act.

A unanimous consent request by Senator O'Daniel (Democrat), of Texas for an immediate vote at this "psychological moment" was blocked by Senator Maloney (Democrat), of Connecticut.

Leaders, who took no part in the O'Daniel move, said their timetable still called for action next Wednesday but declared the bill was already "over the hump" with passage next week assured.

Sharp Words Exchanged

Announced to the Senate as a "murderous and defiant" act on the part of the Nazis by Chairman Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, news of the sinking swayed the Senate from routine debate to hot words on both sides of the central issue of repeal of key sections of the Neutrality Act.

Senator Connally said "this unjustified and dastardly sinking must be avenged," and Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, renewing his demand for outright repeals, shouted: "Why shouldn't we rid the seas of these pirates. Better now than any other time."

Aiken Blames Roosevelt

From the opposition came the floor declaration of Senator Aiken (Republican), of Vermont, that "by ordering convoys in spite of his repeated promises and in contempt of existing law and the Congress of the United States, President Roosevelt is personally responsible for whatever lives may have been lost."

Aiken's statement brought a swift reply from Senate Majority Leader Barkley that the Vermonter's charge was "unfair" and that the President "had more right to outline a defense area around the Western Hemisphere than Hitler did to take a pencil and draw a line 1500 miles out in the Atlantic."

Advising calmness were two of the most outspoken advocates of all-out assistance to all Nations opposing the Axis.

Said Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida: "Let us keep cool, knowing the job ahead is to make

U. S. Will Send Military Mission To Egypt Soon

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 31 (AP).—A United States military mission headed by Brig. Gen. Russel L. Maxwell is scheduled to arrive here within two weeks to take charge of all phases of American aid to Britain in Africa, it was disclosed today.

The mission will be followed by hundreds of American technicians, both military and civil, to put into effect the vast program to be undertaken here under the Lend-Lease Act.

The American activity will include not only getting war supplies in an ever-increasing volume but maintenance of American tanks, airplanes and various construction projects—in fact everything connected with the war short of actual combat.

Navy Lists Seven Officers On Torpedoed Destroyer

Names of Enlisted Men Held Until All Are Accounted For

The Navy last night made public names of the seven officers aboard the destroyer Reuben James at the time she was torpedoed, a grim indication to observers of official belief that the commissioned personnel had perished in the sinking.

It withheld, however, the names of enlisted men pending determination of the identity of those rescued. Only names of enlisted men available came in Associated Press dispatches in which families or friends of men aboard the stricken craft gave names of crewmen.

The officer list, as issued by the Navy Department, with brief sketches of the career of each, follows:

Lieut. Comdr. Heywood L. Edwards, U. S. Navy, commanding, San Saba, Tex.

Lieut. (J. G.) John J. Daub, U. S. Navy, Saltsburg, Pa.

Lieut. (J. G.) James M. Belden, U. S. Naval Reserve, 308 Farmers Street, Syracuse, N. Y.

Lieut. Ghetzler was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., September 19, 1907. He attended the Main Avenue High School, San Antonio, Tex., before receiving an appointment to the U. S. Naval Academy in 1927. He was graduated in 1931 and has served in the U. S. S. Colorado, the U. S. S. Arkansas, the U. S. S. Luzon (Asiatic Fleet) and the U. S. S. Omaha. He took a postgraduate course at the Naval Academy in 1938-39. Subsequently he served in the U. S. S. Goff. In 1940 he joined the U. S. S. Reuben James.

Lieut. Johnston was born in New Castle, Oklahoma, January 20, 1910. He attended Amber High School, Amber, Okla., prior to appointment to the U. S. Naval Academy in 1929. At the Academy he was awarded track "N" 1932-33; track "N" star in 1934. After graduation he served in the U. S. S. Chicago, the U. S. S. Yarnall and the U. S. S. Arkansas. He attended the U. S. Naval Finance and Supply School, Philadelphia, in 1937-38. He

Sinking Is Kept From Captain's Wife

Newport, R. I., Oct. 31 (AP).—News of the sinking of the Reuben James was withheld today from Mrs. Almeda Edwards, wife of Lieut. Comdr. H. L. Edwards, skipper of the torpedoed vessel.

Mrs. Edwards was at the bedside of her mother, who was seriously ill, and Navy friends decided to keep word of the sinking from her as long as possible.

President Guards Talk About Sinking

Denies Advisability Of Break With Nazis Is Being Considered

President Roosevelt yesterday discussed the sinking of the destroyer Reuben James with great reserve, offering only the briefest comment at his press conference, which was crowded with scores of correspondents seeing a possibility of a momentous Presidential statement.

He opened the conference with a calm remark that he had no news on the sinking, beyond the Navy Department announcement and quickly passed on to disclose the resignation of Ambassador Josephus Daniels.

It was only when a reporter later asked the President if the sinking changed the "international position of the United States," that the President said he did not think it did and added that the American destroyer was just carrying out duties already assigned to it.

The President replied in the negative when asked if the Administration, as a result of the episode, was considering advisability of severing diplomatic relations with Nazi Germany.

Mr. Roosevelt smilingly told the reporters he would not tell them, if he knew, whether any submarines had been sunk in the latest clash between American and Axis naval units in the North Atlantic.

He said he supported the position of Secretary of the Navy Knox, who stated Wednesday that this Government would follow the British policy of secrecy on submarine sinkings in order to deprive the German high command of valuable information and undermine the morale of U-boat crews by concealing the fate of their comrades.

When a reporter asked if Berlin really had any reason to be in doubt as to the fate of some of the submarines which have crossed the path of American warships, the President said he didn't know.

'No Wonder She Was Sunk'

Destroyer Had No Business In War Zone, Berlin Says

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Oct. 31.—If the United States destroyer Reuben James was participating in a convoy "it was no wonder that she was torpedoed," an authorized source said tonight.

"A convoy is an English affair and whoever participates in it becomes part of an English formation," it was declared.

"I am certainly glad it was not our U-boat that was sunk but rather the American destroyer that was torpedoed," the spokesman added. "American destroyers have no business entering the war zone."

Heavier Attack Predicted

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 31.—The sinking of the U. S. destroyer Reuben James, following attacks on the American destroyers Greer and Kearny, was described by an authoritative British spokesman tonight as a clear indication that Germany already is waging "indiscriminate warfare against the United States."

Furthermore, this spokesman observed, "the United States can expect heavier and heavier attacks against her shipping west of Iceland."

The German submarines, he said, have supply ships which can operate in the vicinity of Baffins Bay, which lies above the Arctic Circle off the west coast of Greenland, while the U-boats themselves have been improved to give a wider operating range.

Germany recently has concentrated on making submarines of from 500 to 800 tons with a range of from 8000 to 10,000 miles, the spokesman said.

An "enormous" German submarine fleet, he said, has been sent into the North Atlantic and ob-

Third Chapter

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Navy Department announced last night that 44 members of the crew of the American destroyer Reuben James, torpedoed and sunk the night before in the North Atlantic, have been rescued.

No mention was made of the fate of some 76 others aboard the 21-year-old war vessel, but the fact that the announcement came more than 12 hours after the first report of the sinking gave credence to the fear that they may be lost.

All of the survivors accounted for are enlisted men, the Navy said, but it had no information as to their identity. Officials withheld publication of the ship's roster, pending receipt of a complete report of the fate of the men aboard.

War's First U. S. Sinking

The Reuben James, first American warship lost in the Battle of the Atlantic, was sunk by a torpedo while on convoy duty west of Iceland, the Navy said. The brief announcement did not mention what torpedoed the destroyer, but official Washington and the belligerent capitals took it for granted that it was a German submarine.

Despite the lapse of time, naval officials held hope that more rescues would be reported. The Reuben James carried two motor lifeboats with a normal capacity of 24 each, six balsa wood lifeboats, designed for 25 persons each, and life preservers for 15 per cent more men than were aboard.

Moreover, since the destroyer was on convoy duty, it is assumed that friendly craft nearby may have picked up additional men and not have reported them due to radio silence. On the other hand, it was recalled that destroyers similar to the Reuben James have gone down within a matter of minutes when torpedoed in the World War and the present conflict.

Kearny a Sister Ship

The Kearny, which was torpedoed in the same general area October 16, but survived, is a much sturdier vessel of the latest design, completed only a year ago.

Loss of the 1190-ton vessel and the torpedoing of the Kearny brought the toll of American war vessels torpedoed by German U-boats in World War II to the total of World War I. During 1917-18, the Destroyer Jacob Jones was sunk with a loss of 64 lives and the

New York, Oct. 31—Lieutenant Commander Heywood L. Edwards, a rangy, soft-spoken Texan who had won prominence as a wrestler during and after his Naval Academy days, was the commander of the destroyer Reuben James, whose sinking was announced today.

Six feet two inches tall, blond and strong-chinned, "Tex" Edwards," as he was called, was probably the most prominent man in the academy's class of 1926, according to one classmate, Jackson A. Lahn, of Brooklyn, while others who knew him later in the Navy described him as a cautious able officer.

Graduated in 1926

Born at San Saba, Texas, on Nov. 9, 1905, he was appointed to the United States Naval Academy in 1922, and was graduated four years later. During his years as a midshipmen he was a member of the Navy wrestling team, competing in the unlimited weight class. He won all of his eighteen intercollegiate bouts, fourteen on falls. He was also on the football squad.

In the summer following his graduation he remained at Annapolis for aviation training and that September was assigned to duty aboard the battleship Florida, where he remained until February, 1928, when he was recalled to the Naval Academy to train with the Olympic wrestling squad. He served as captain of the squad that year.

In September, 1928, he reported for duty on the cruiser Reno and until December, 1930, he served aboard that cruiser and later aboard various destroyers. Assigned then to the submarine base at New London, Conn., he completed a course in underseas navigation and served aboard the submarine Bonito.

Wife's Brother a Skipper

He was recalled again to the academy in 1932 to prepare for the Olympics. Later he was assigned to the submarine Barracuda, then to Annapolis for post-graduate instruction, and then to the cruiser Detroit, where he served from June, 1935, to May, 1938. During the next two years he was on duty at the Norfolk Navy Yard and on April 6, 1940, he was given command of the Reuben James. Lieut. Comdr. Edwards married the former Almeda Stewart. They had no children.

A brother-in-law, Lieut. Comdr. R. B. Ellis, is in command of a sister ship of the Reuben James, also on duty in the North Atlantic.

'We're Asking for It,' One Crewman Wrote to Father

By the Associated Press

Anxiously waiting for word of the survivors from the torpedoed destroyer Reuben James, families and friends of crewmen and officers yesterday recalled the last messages they had received from those aboard.

The father of James Walton Rogers, 24-year-old seaman from Chattanooga, Tenn., reported that his son had written him October 15:

"We're asking for it and, as you predict, it'll probably happen any time now."

In the letter young Rogers added, describing one trip:

"Yes, we saw and contacted several subs this 37-day cruise . . . Our job is only to drop ash cans to keep em scared away from the convoy, but we're asking for it."

"I'm going to leave this here; it's not going down with me," he told his wife as he laid the watch on the mantel.

Cousins, a native of Leominster, Mass., went to sea at 17 and served 16 years in the Navy before retiring about 10 years ago. He was recalled into active service in August, 1940.

The mother of a Buffalo, N. Y., sailor said when told of the sinking:

"He should have got his torpedo off before the submarine did."

Mrs. Ernest P. Howard, the mother, asserted that her son Robert, 21, was a third-class torpedo man on the ship. His last letter was dated October 19, and at that time he said the destroyer soon might go to an Atlantic Coast seaport for overhauling.

One Planned Marriage

John Fitzgerald, 21, of Hampstead, N. H., aboard the Reuben James when last heard from recently, planned to marry a next-door neighbor, Dorothy Dustin, in December. He had informed his intended bride that he had been assured a 20-day leave then.

Lieut. John J. Daub, jr., son of the headmaster of the Kiski Preparatory School at Saltsburg, Pa., was assigned to the destroyer only three weeks ago, his father said. The torpedoing occurred on the day his brother, Craig, was scheduled to complete a course as flying cadet at Randolph Field, Tex.

In a letter to his mother in Stanley, N. Y., 21-year-old Seaman Charles Phalen wrote two weeks ago from Boston that he expected another convoy trip soon.

William A. Flynn, 22, of Philadelphia, who was a bus boy in a restaurant there before he enlisted two and a half years ago, informed his sister in a recent letter:

"I have a piece of news that will give you a big laugh. I am the ship's barber. Can you beat that?"

Destroyer Cassin was torpedoed. It limped to port.

(Nine naval auxiliaries were sunk by U-boats, and two other warships by mines during World War I.)

Except for the brief report of the sinking of the vessel and of the rescue of 44 men, the Navy Department had no information on the third clash between German submarines and American convoy warships since the war started.

The lack of news, officials said, is due to the fact that other ships in the convoy would be reluctant to use their radios while still in U-boat infested waters.

First word of the incident, which stirred Washington and intensified bitter Congressional debate over foreign policy was received early this morning in a seven-line statement from the Navy Department. It read:

"The Navy Department announced that the U. S. Destroyer Reuben James was sunk by a torpedo during the night of October 30-31 while convoying in the North Atlantic, west of Iceland.

"The commanding officer is Lieut. Comdr. H. L. Edward, U. S. Navy.

"No further details are available at this time, but will be released when received."

Then during a tense 12-hour wait, there was no further word from the middle of the Atlantic. At a few minutes before ten last night, the Department issued a second statement, reading as follows:

"The Navy Department has received a report that forty-four members of the crew of the U. S. S. Reuben James have been rescued. The survivors who have been counted for are all enlisted men.

"The Navy Department has no further information at this time, but additional details will be released when received."

The Reuben James was one of the old "flush deck" destroyers, mounting four stacks, built at the end of the World War. Similar to the 50 old destroyers traded to Great Britain last year for island bases in the Atlantic, she was 314 feet long and had a beam of 30 feet.

Armed with four 4-inch guns, a battery of antiaircraft guns, and depth charges, she was built by the New York Shipbuilding Co., and launched at Camden, N. J., October 4, 1919.

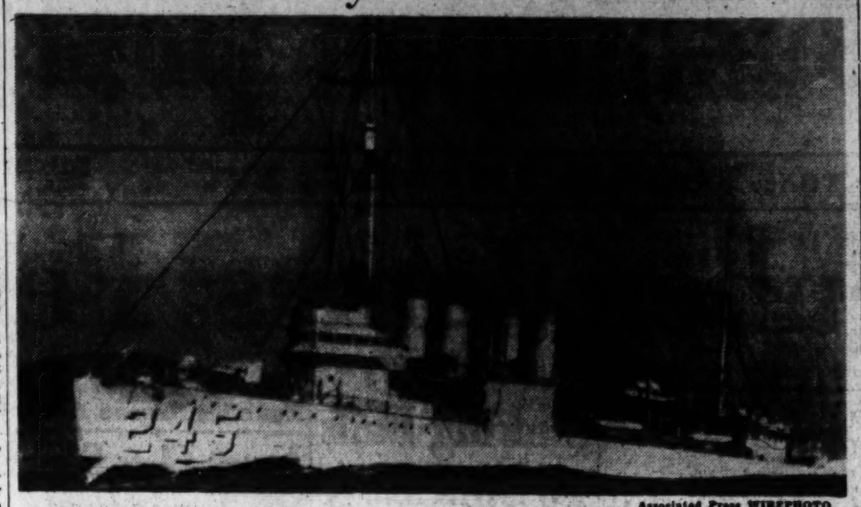
U. S. Destroyer Sent to the Bottom



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

SUNK IN NORTH ATLANTIC—The U. S. S. Reuben James was sunk by a torpedo Thursday night while convoying in the North Atlantic, the Navy announced yesterday. The Reuben James is the third United States destroyer to be involved in Atlantic battles since convoying by American warships was inaugurated in this war

U. S. Officers Are Confident Of U-Boat Hits

By the Associated Press

Naval men said yesterday they were virtually certain that American warships have scored some hits on German U-boats since the Navy got its shooting orders.

Among experienced officers, the belief was generally expressed that not all the highly destructive depth charges dropped by United States vessels on patrol and convoy duty could have gone wide of their targets.

They explained, for one thing, that it is by no means necessary to drop a depth bomb directly on or beside a submarine in order to injure it, or even to sink it. A depth bomb usually contains about 300 pounds of T. N. T. in a can 18 inches in diameter and 28 inches long. The violence of the explosion underwater is so great that at a distance of 300 feet a submarine may be badly damaged, if not wrecked.

The main force of the explosion is upward, along the lines of a cone. A submarine caught in the immediate area of the blast may be crushed. At a greater distance, it may suffer buckled plates and ripped seams. Still farther away, it is likely to be thrown off its "trim," so that it becomes uncontrollable, and lastly, the officers and crew may be so dazed by the force of the blow as to lose control of their ship.

But even under the best conditions, there is great difficulty in telling whether the powerful bombs hit their marks.

Much of the fighting is at night, the time at which the U-boats frequently attack heavily laden convoys. Even in the daytime, unless there is a very heavy accumulation of fuel oil from ruptured tanks, it is difficult to tell whether a hit has been registered.

A submarine's greatest defensive protection is its ability to sink into the ocean and lie silent, in order to make the surface foe believe that it has escaped. Or it may release a little oil, to misled the enemy into believing it sunk.

A surface ship's greatest protection, aside from its offensive strength in depth charges and its superior gunpower against a submarine caught on surface, is its speed and maneuverability. The track of a torpedo is given away by bubbles by day and phosphorescence by night, and a destroyer, corvette or other craft may dodge the missile.

The ship which he was sailing was lost in the Red Sea.

Reuben James Named for Hero Credited With Saving Decatur

By John M. Hightower
Associated Press Staff Writer

Sinking of the destroyer Reuben James brought to public notice today a hoary historical controversy and the story of how justice was done to the memory of an American seaman whose name would otherwise have passed into limbo.

The Reuben James was named for a heroic seaman and lusty fighter who was born in the epochal year of 1776 and fought in the bloody war against the pirates of the Barbary Coast.

One of the high spots of the numerous naval actions which occurred during that war of 1803-1805 was an attack on Tripoli by a squadron of American warships, including a gunboat division commanded by Capt. Stephen Decatur, jr., August 3, 1804. It was as a result of this engagement that Reuben James was credited with his most heroic exploit. In the course of the fight, Decatur was knocked down by a Tripolitan warrior and the scimitar of another assailant was quickly raised to deliver the fatal blow.

In apparent disregard of his own safety or even his life, one of Decatur's men interposed his own body and received the blow intended for his commander. The stroke was not fatal.

As soon as word of the sinking of the destroyer came out yesterday the Navy Department checked through records explaining the naming of the ship during the World War, when it was built. Officials found an account giving Reuben James credit for saving Decatur and saying also that he recovered from his wound so completely that he followed Capt. Decatur to other ships.

In fact, it was related, he lived to fight bravely during the War of 1812 with Britain, in the course of which he was made prisoner and held abroad until the end of the conflict.

This account was called into question when officials ran across an explanatory note under a big painting of the Tripoli incident which hangs in the Navy Department near the office of Secretary Knox. It says that Decatur's life was saved either by Reuben James or a seaman named Daniel Frazier.

Spurred by inquiries, the Navy press section sought to find out who actually did save Decatur. Official records then turned up showed that "it has not been determined to the satisfaction of all students whether it was Daniel Frazier or Reuben James."

According to this document, no report had been recorded of wounds received by James during the Tripoli attack, but the surgeon's report then made did show several wounds suffered by Daniel Frazier. That, it was said, constituted the principal evidence for the case of Daniel Frazier.

On the other hand, the Navy record said, "it is generally understood that the Decatur family believes Reuben James is correct, because of the lifelong devotion of Reuben James to Capt. Decatur and his family."

Rising Toll Of U. S. Naval Losses Seen

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

A grim naval war on the Atlantic, which probably will see a rising toll not only of American destroyers but of larger warships, was visualized here yesterday.

With the damaging of the U. S. S. Kearny and the sinking of the U. S. S. Reuben James, the United States Navy already has suffered as much damage to its destroyer strength from torpedo attacks as it did in 1917-18 and this despite the fact that the United States is not formally at war with Germany in 1941.

In the entire course of America's participation in the World War, only one destroyer was sunk by a torpedo, the U. S. S. Jacob Jones, and only one was damaged, the U. S. S. Cassin.

Hitler's Threat Recalled

Chancellor Hitler, it appears, has definitely set out to make good on the warning he sounded to the United States on January 30 in connection with American aid to Britain:

"Every ship, whether important or not, that comes within range of our torpedo tubes will be torpedoed."

There was a widespread feeling for a while that Hitler would do almost anything in the way of leaning backward to keep the United States out of the war. It was felt that he already had too much on his hands to take on another powerful foe. But this notion was thoroughly exploded by the torpedo which sent the Reuben James to the bottom of the North Atlantic.

In this case Nazi spokesmen made no attempt to offer alibis as they did in the case of the Greer and Kearny. An authorized spokesman in Berlin said that he was "certainly glad" that it was an American destroyer that was sunk, and not a German U-boat.

Students of naval warfare here in Washington, in predicting a rising toll of American warships in the strange, undeclared battle that is now raging in the Atlantic, based their statement on many things, including the increased strength of the German fleet of undersea boats and also the superior wolf-pack tactics that are being pursued.

Germany, according to trustworthy estimates, started the current war in 1939 with three times as many submarines as she had at the start of the World War in 1914. Moreover, the rate of construction is higher than it was in 1914-18. Also some Italian submarines are known to be operating in the Atlantic, and French shipyards are being used to turn out additional submarines for Italy.

The Germans are believed to have doubled the number of submarines they had when Hitler launched the war. The rate of replacement, therefore, has been running well ahead of the rate of destruction. Today, it is estimated, Germany has a fleet of submarines that totals anywhere from 150 to 200.

In view of the U-boat attacks on the Kearny and the Reuben James, which represent good shooting when it is considered that the U-boat is the hunted and not the hunter, where destroyers are concerned, naval men expect that the United States will now have to throw everything it can spare into the Battle of the Atlantic.

The man in the street looked upon the sinking of the Reuben James as another event bringing war closer to the United States. That is not the attitude of men in the United States Navy. They feel that the war already has started.

served that Germany "cannot really reach her objective unless she goes for such shipping."

He expressed the opinion that intensive British air reconnaissance east of Iceland had driven the German submarines westward, and he observed that "this menace can be met by increasing air reconnaissance on the other side of the Atlantic and naturally from Iceland itself."

Kin Give Partial List of Crewmen

By the Associated Press

Danville, Va., Oct. 31.—Among the personnel of the U. S. S. Reuben James was L. C. Dickerson, of Stuart, Va., son of the late Dr. L. C. Dickerson and Mrs. Dickerson, who still resides at the Patrick County seat. He enlisted in the Navy here 18 months ago. Relatives had heard from him recently from the Iceland station.

Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 31 (AP).—At least four West Virginia seamen were on the destroyer Reuben James, sunk in the Atlantic off Iceland last night.

Relatives listed them as Joseph Settle, 17, of Charleston; Wendell Neptune, 21, of Metz, Marion County; Aaron H. Stewart, 21, of Beckley, and Lou Farley, 24, of Hurricane, Putnam County.

Glens Falls, N. Y., Oct. 31 (AP).—Albert J. Mondoux, 38, who returned two years ago to active duty in the Navy after retiring in 1938, was known here as chief water tender aboard the U. S. destroyer Reuben James.

St. Louis, Oct. 31 (AP).—Mrs. Elizabeth Kloepper today said her son, Ralph Kloepper, St. Louis naval reservist, was a member of the Reuben James' crew.

Kloepper was called for active duty 13 months ago after six years on reserve. His mother said he was nearly due to be relieved.

Clarence L. Wells telephoned the Navy recruiting office and his brothers, Rupert A. Wells, 29, of St. Louis, and R. D. Wells, 28, of De Soto, Mo., were members of the Reuben James crew.

By the Associated Press

These Pennsylvanians were reported to have been on the Reuben James:

John Francis Bauer, jr., 29, of Chester, radioman.

Wilton (Bud) Taylor), 22, New Castle, electrician.

The family of Joseph Molnar, 19, of Allentown, think he was a first class fireman on the vessel but are not sure. Recent letters from him bore the words "U. S. S. Reuben James."

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 31 (AP).—Mrs. Ernest P. Howard said today her son, Robert J. Howard, 21, is a third-class torpedoman on the Reuben James.

Howard enlisted in the Navy in Buffalo two years ago. His last letter to his parents was written October 19.

Akron, Ohio, Oct. 31 (AP).—At least three Akron residents were aboard the United States destroyer Reuben James, family members reported today. They were:

James Brantley Clark, 20; C. C. Hayes, 19, and Joseph Hajoway, 21.

Stanley, N. Y., Oct. 31 (AP).—Charles Phalen, 21, who enlisted in the Navy at Rochester last January and in March was assigned to the United States destroyed Reuben James, was believed aboard the vessel when it was sunk on convoy duty last night.

Last word to his mother, Mrs. Martha Phalen, received from her son was a letter two weeks ago, written from Boston, in which he said another convoy trip was expected soon.

Petty Officer Listed

Cranston, R. I., Oct. 31 (U.P.).—A chief petty officer aboard the sunk U. S. destroyer Reuben James was Alton A. Cousins, 44-year-old reservist, who made his home with his wife and daughter here.

Cousins, a veteran of 16 years' service, including duty in the World War, had been called to active duty in August, 1940, after a ten-year retirement. He told his family on his last visit home, about two weeks ago, that he was going on patrol duty with the ship.

Chester, Pa., Oct. 31 (AP).—John Francis Bauer, jr., 29, of Chester, was chief radioman on the torpedoed U. S. destroyer Reuben James, his father said today.

Besides the father, Bauer's mother and three sisters live in Chester.

Tampa, Fla., Oct. 31 (AP).—A bride of six weeks, Mrs. Edgar W. Musselwhite of nearby Dover, anxiously awaited news tonight from the United States destroyer Reuben James, refusing to give up hope for her husband, a machinist's mate on the ship.

Her husband, 21, returned here in September on a month's leave and was then married to the former Miss Sally Howze. He reboarded the Reuben James October 1 at Portland, Me.

Miami, Fla., Oct. 31 (AP).—A letter from a crew master of the Reuben James told of other encounters with submarines before the American destroyer was torpedoed last night.

The Miami Herald said Gene Guy Evans, son of Mrs. Clyde Evans, of Vero Beach, wrote to a friend there, saying in part:

"We encountered several subs • • • but dropped depth charges and I guess we destroyed some of them as wreckage and oil came to the surface."

Fort Worth, Tex., Oct. 31 (INS).—"Oh, thank God! I certainly hope he is safe!" sobbed Mrs. Nancy Reid, of Fort Worth, tonight when informed that 44 men had been rescued, and there still was a possibility her son, aboard the torpedoed destroyer Reuben James, was alive.

Mrs. Reid's son, Lee L. Reid, 33, of Dallas, was a first-class torpedoman aboard the ship.

Portland, Me., Oct. 31 (AP).—Sixty sailormen's wives were torn between fear and hope tonight as they awaited word of their husbands, approximately half the crewmen of the torpedoed destroyer Reuben James.

They stood together at newspaper and telegraph offices, waiting tensely for news.

Stewardess Killed In Plane Crash

MARY E. BLACKLEY

Miss Mary E. Blackley, the young stewardess, lost with 19 others on the airlines transport which crashed Thursday night near St. Thomas, Ont., had many friends in Washington.

The attractive, blonde served three years as a supervisor at St. Elizabeths Hospital, from whose nursing course she graduated in 1938. She was noted for her vivacity, and her accomplishments ranged from the handling of mental cases, to the modeling of clothing.

Miss Blackley, who was 27, came here from Hamlet, N. C., in 1935. She is survived by her parents, two sisters and three brothers.

3 Investigators Start Probe; Farm Wife Tells of Seeing Plane

By the Associated Press

St. Thomas, Ont., Oct. 31.—Three inspectors of the United States Civil Aeronautics Board tonight took over the investigation into the unexplained crash of an American Airlines transport plane which plunged 17 passengers and three crew members to death in an oat field Thursday night in a drizzling rain.

As a meager beginning from which to work the investigators had a last radio report from the plane, only a few minutes before it crashed, and the statements of a farmer and his wife who saw the big 21-passenger Douglas smash and burst into flames 200 yards from their home, 14 miles west of here.

The latest report from Pilot David I. Cooper, 34, of Plandome, N. Y., said everything was normal at 9:39 p. m. (E. S. T.) when the plane was at 4000 feet over Jarvis, Ont., on the Buffalo-Detroit leg of the airline's regular New York to Chicago service. Jarvis is only a few miles from the scene of the crash.

Farm Wife Saw Plane

Mrs. Thompson Howe, on whose farm the plane crashed, said she heard the plane overhead and "something about the sound of the motors made me decide to ta' a look." She saw the plane loom out of the murky sky, barely miss high tension wires, and hit the field with an explosion which set the twisted wreckage afire.

Other residents nearby said the plane had seemed to circle overhead, its motors sputtering, and one said he saw a glow in the sky that might have been a flare dropped in search of a landing field.

Three bodies, including that of Mary E. Blackley, formerly a nurse at St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington, D. C., the stewardess and only woman aboard, were found alongside the wreckage. Miss Blackley moved to New York last February.

Provincial police dug through the fire-blackened wreckage for hours to remove the barely recognizable bodies of the others. There were no survivors.

Most Disastrous Day

The 20 deaths, with 14 others killed early Thursday morning in the crash of a Northwest Airlines plane near Moorhead, Minn., made the day the most disastrous in loss of life in American commercial aviation history.

The 17 passengers and crew members aboard the plane were officially listed by the line as:

Robert Flowers, Hastings, N. Y.

Edward Bigda, 24, Bridgeport, Conn., aircraft inspector of the Vought-Sikorsky division of United Aircraft Corporation.

A. L. Lewis, Walpole, Mass., also of Vought-Sikorsky, engineering department.

Crews Rush To Aid Pilots In Sierras

By International News Service

Fresno, Calif., Oct. 31.—Two Army Air Corps pilots, who had been stranded since last Friday in the snow-swept High Sierra, were rushed in State highway patrol cars tonight from the mountain foothills to the Fresno Army Air Base hospital.

The airmen, Lieuts. Jack C. West and Leonard C. Lyndon, both of Des Moines, Iowa, were brought down the rugged, almost inaccessible slopes of Barton Peak on pack horses today.

West and Lyndon were denied visitors. Col. Lotha A. Smith, airbase commandant, said the fliers, although "tremendously weak," were treated for exhaustion, given food and put in beds for the night.

The two were flying in formation with 17 others of the Fifty-seventh Pursuit Squadron, based in Connecticut, when they were scattered in a raging storm over the Tehachapi Mountains. West and Lyndon were seen in the High Sierra yesterday by an Army bomber crew, climaxing a widespread search by air and ground crews.

One pilot, Lieut. R. N. Long, was still missing.

The ground crew that brought out West and Lyndon left 34 of its 36 members, most of them seasoned mountaineers, at Horse Corral to continue the search for Long.

Maj. Carroll S. Miller, in charge of the ground crew, said West had stumbled onto an unoccupied cabin on the mountainside, near Roaring River. There he found food, firewood and fishing equipment.

"A day or two later," Miller said, "Lieut. Lyndon saw smoke rising over the mountain and this led him to the cabin. He knocked on the door and said to Lieut. West:

"'I'm Lieut. Lyndon, an aviator. I'm lost.'

Lieut. West was amazed. He said:

"'My God, I am, too. Come on in.'"

West, who had never fished before, used the rod and reel found in the cabin and caught a number of trout.

Fiancee Still Hopes

Connellsville, Pa., Oct. 31 (AP).—Rachel Thomasson, fiancee of Lieut. Richard N. Long, missing Army pilot, expressed confidence today he was alive after being informed that two of Long's fellow fliers had been found safe in the Sierra Nevada Mountains of California.

She declared:

"If those two lived through a week in the mountains, he could have, too. We can still hope."

Mrs. James Long, the flier's mother, broke into tears when told her son still was missing, but said she was glad two other mothers had been made happy.

Lieut. Long and Miss Thomasson had planned to marry October 24, but his leave was canceled and he disappeared that same day in a storm. Long, in the Army just a year, had been promoted to flight commander.

Bates Will Relate Details of Crash

Moorhead, Minn., Oct. 31 (AP).—Frank Caldwell of the Civil Aeronautics Board said today that Capt. Clarence Bates, pilot and only survivor of the crash of a Northwest Airlines plane that killed 14 persons near here early yesterday, would tell his story by deposition at public hearings next Monday or Tuesday.

Caldwell, Brig. Gen. Donald H. Connelly, National Civil Aeronautics Administrator, and other officials talked with Bates in the hospital today but did not disclose what he told them. Questioning of the pilot had been deferred until today on physicians' orders. Attending doctors said he would be kept in the hospital about two weeks.

Bates apparently suffered only from shock and bruises when he was thrown from the cockpit when the ship fell to earth and burst into flames.

Meanwhile the grim task of identifying the seared bodies of the 12 passengers, the co-pilot and the stewardess who perished, proceeded slowly. Positive identifications were lacking on three bodies—believed those of W. A. Metzger, 39, New York; Ned H. Wells, 41, Fargo, N. Dak., and R. W. Ramsey, 47, North Canton, Ohio. The rest were to be sent to their homes today.

A public hearing will be held, the C. A. B. announced in Washington, with Stuart G. Tipton, assistant general counsel, as examiner. No date was set.

Capt. Bates was visited last night by Mrs. Bates, who flew here from their Minneapolis home upon hearing of the tragedy. Leaving the room, she said Capt. Bates did not "remember what happened and doesn't seem to remember the final crash."

Defense Mediation Board Meets to Consider Coal Dispute

IN SESSION—Members of the National Defense Mediation Board met yesterday in the SEC building to consider final recommendations for settlement of the "captive" coal mine dispute. Clockwise around the table are George Meany, John Brophy, Clinton S. Golden, Philip Murray, Thomas Kennedy, Walter T. Fisher, William H. Davis, Charles E. Wyzanski, Frank P. Graham, George W. Stocking, Cyrus Ching, Roger D. Lapham, Eugene Meyer, George H. Meade, Walter C. Teagle and an unidentified committee clerk five-day strike of 53,000 miners earlier this week.

"The assurance given by the President to the United States Steel Corporation and the United Mine Workers of America in his letter of October 29 is 'that the full board is meeting on Friday and will be prepared to consider the matter continuously until it makes its final recommendations,'" Davis wrote.

Stating that he had no doubt that the board can easily reach its decision and make its final recommendations some time next week, Davis pointedly remarked, "But however that may be, the board will proceed to consider the merits of the dispute carefully, calmly and not under pressure."

Within an hour, Lewis replied:

"You assured the President that your board could reach a decision before the end of next week. The temporary agreement extends a week beyond your own time requirement.

"Under these circumstances it is obvious your point is not well taken."

Earlier, Davis had said that setting a deadline on the proceedings was "undesirable" because it put the board "under pressure of time."

Asked about Lewis' reply, Davis said that the mine workers' president had made the same point which he, Davis, had, but that Lewis did not think it a good point.

"I do," Davis concluded tartly.

During the course of yesterday's board meeting, it was learned, C. I. O. President Philip Murray, a labor member of the board, criticized earlier recommendations of the board panel considering the dispute. These called for two alternate methods of procedure, both ultimately involving compulsory arbitration. It was this feature that Murray condemned.

On the other hand, Labor Representative George Meany, secretary-treasurer of the A. F. of L., offered a resolution that would have sent the dispute back to President Roosevelt and would have prohibited the issuance of board recommendations unless both sides agreed beforehand to accept them as binding. The motion was later outlawed.

It was reported reliably yesterday that when the issue is presented for a vote, the four labor representatives will favor the grant of the union shop. It is virtually certain that the four employer representatives will oppose it, thus tossing the issue into the lap of the three public members.

Besides Davis, they are Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, and Charles E. Wyzanski, jr., lawyer, who was formerly special assistant to the Attorney General and solicitor of the Labor Department.

The other labor member, besides Calvin, Murray and Meany, is Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the mine workers.

The employer members are Cyrus Ching, vice president of United States Rubber Co.; Roger D. Lapham, chairman of the board of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co.; Walter C. Teagle, chairman of Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, and Eugene Meyer, editor and publisher of The Washington Post.

Lewis' Closed Shop Demand Is Stressed

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, will never accept less than a closed shop agreement from operators of "captive mines," Michael Widman, assistant C. I. O. director of organization and a member of Lewis' union, said last night.

He spoke at an organizing dinner of 200 members of the C. I. O. United Federal Workers of America at Hotel Harrington.

"A lot of people seem to be able to forget quickly the man who has done more for the labor movement than any othef person," he shouted. "Hysteria takes place on Capitol Hill as soon as our enemies see a chance to shake some old skeletons at us."

Widman warned the group to devote their energies to recruiting new members now to be prepared to protect themselves against a post-emergency depression.

ice. Present Army base pay is $21 monthly for the private.

Increases in subsistence pay for both men and officers were proposed to meet higher costs of living since the original pay acts of 1908 and 1922.

Allowances Also Raised

Similar increases were provided for all other grades of noncommissioned officers, warrant officers, nurses and officers.

As an example, second lieutenants in the army and ensigns in the navy, classed as the first pay period, would be increased from a present minimum base pay of $1,500 a year to $1,800. Rental and subsistence allowances for all officers also would be stepped up.

Pay for army and navy nurses now starting at $70 monthly would be advanced to a minimum of $90, rising to $150 after 12 years service.

The bill would increase the unit of "subsistence" allowance for food and clothing from 60 to 70 cents and grant two such units daily to all junior officers (those of the first three pay grades) with dependents. Officers of higher grades would get three units.

It would also permit an officer to draw the pay of his rank, regardless of time served. Present law requires some officers to serve a minimum number of years before obtaining pay of their rank.

Proposed Changes Listed

Some of the proposed base pay changes would be:

Officers—second lieutenant (Army) and ensign (Navy), from $1500 annually to $1800; first lieutenant (Army) and lieutenant, junior grade (Navy), from $2000 to $2100; captain (Army) and lieutenant (Navy), from $2400 to $2700; major (Army) and lieutenant commander (Navy), from $3000 to $3300; lieutenant colonel (Army) and commander (Navy), from $4000 to $4200; colonel (Army) and commander (Navy), from $3500 to $3800; colonel (Army) and captain (Navy), from $4000 to $4200. Similar increases would be given higher officers.

Enlisted men—Privates (Army) and nonrated men (Navy), from $30 to $42 monthly; privates first class (Army) and firemen and similar grades (Navy), from $36 to $48; corporals (Army) and firemen, mess attendants of certain grades (Navy, from $54 to $60; sergeants (Army) and certain grades of firemen, musicians, and cooks (Navy), from $60 to $78; staff sergeants (Army) and petty officers, second class (Navy), from $78 to $96; technical and first sergeants (Army) and petty officers, officers' stewards and cooks (Navy), from $84 to $114; master sergeant (Army) and mates and chief petty officers (Navy), from $126 to $138.

At almost the same time the right of Navy and Marine Corps enlisted men to receive the $10 monthly increase authorized effctive August 19 in the Service Extension Act for Army enlisted men with a year's service was upheld in an opinion by Comptroller General Lindsay Warren.

The Service Extension Act applied specifically to Army men and selectees, but the Selective Service and Training Act of September 16, 1940, provided that naval enlisted men should receive the same pay and allowances as Army enlisted men.

Egyptian Imer Kawsar, three British merchantmen and American freighters and tankers.

Almost 600 of the Air Associates plant's normal complement of 750 have been rehired, Col. Jones said tonight. More than 300 worked today and 91 others were at work on the night shift, which normally operates with 100 employes. The men were taken back into the plant, which holds $5,000,000 in defense orders for vital aviation equipment, without regard to their former status, Col. Jones emphasized.

Firm's President Absent

F. Leroy Hill, president of Air Associates, was one of the former company men not back on the payroll. He and the C. I. O. United Automobile Workers of America were frequently at odds during the lengthy labor dispute which finally brought last night a Presidential proclamation seizing the plant to avoid a threatened production halt.

"Hill has gone home and is not coming back, as far as I know," said the new boss of the plant. "He is now a former employe."

Col. Jones said Hill had agreed to cooperate in every way, as had other members of the executive staff of the firm. Hill said he did not know whether he was rehired or not but would cooperate.

Both C. I. O. workers and nonstrikers, bitter opponents during the months of labor dispute that evoked three C. I. O. and one nonunion walkout as well as several violent clashes, lined up in the morning at the roadway leading to the plant and awaited Army rehiring.

They cheered in unison when Colonel Jones announced the Army would rehire with the only consideration the patriotism of the workers.

Flanking the employes and barring entrance to the single road to the plant's front gate was a platoon of steel-helmeted coast artillery officers and men, armed with tear gas, riot guns, naked bayonets and 60 rounds of ammunition.

Several yards behind, commanding the entrance to the plant a half-mile away, were two newly oiled machine guns, loaded clips ready.

Surrounding the entire area were the deployed artillery men from Forts Hancock, Jay Wadsworth and Hamilton of the New York harbor coastal defenses.

Behind machine-gun nests, moats and the weeds of Bendix airport the soldiers took up stations for day and night vigil. Most of them had been up more than 24 hours and had not eaten for 12 hours.

Tents quickly rose amid the tall, dry grass adjoining the airport and many of the soldiers made ready for sleep and an indefinite stay. Some were expected to return to their posts once production was firmly under way.

After 12 hours of Army seizure, Colonel Jones said, "we feel very much encouraged, but a situation like this requires time and patience. We feel we are getting cooperation out of the workers and they are showing they are going to help us lick this job."

New identification badges and numbers were issued to the rehired workers, but Colonel Jones said pay rates and working conditions would be unchanged. Then he added: "We don't have any such thing as union and nonunion workers. We are working for defense. No one has been refused employment and no one refused to work."

The labor dispute began when the C.I.O. attempted to organize the plant three years ago. It won a National Labor Relations Board election last June and its subsequent three strikes grew out of charges the company refused to bargain collectively and used unfair labor practices.

The demonstration strike yesterday of non-C.I.O. members occurred when C.I.O. workers replaced nonstrikers under OPM and Army orders. That demonstration and incidental violence inside the plant precipitated Federal seizure.

The company said the last C.I.O. strike involved 65 workers.

Sinking Fails To Spur Action On Repealer

sure of the earliest, speediest death of despotism. I am following Roosevelt in the details of foreign policy because I have unshaken confidence in him."

Commented Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah: "There is no reason for the country to become inflamed. It is better to meet incident with incident rather than to get in a general war."

Despite frequent interruptions and interpolated comments, debate followed the schedule of "set" speeches and leaders ordered the Senate into session today for more debate before driving hard for action next week.

Three vigorous opponents of the bill took the floor—Senators Brooks, of Illinois, Capper of Kansas, and Hollman of Oregon (all Republicans), while McKellar led off for outright repeal and Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, spoke for the Administration bill.

"Aye" Poll Gains

Already assured of enough votes for final passage, Senator Connally said the "aye" poll had gained ground since the Reuben James' sinking. As of yesterday the "no" count stood at 40 as a maximum, nine less than a majority of the Senate.

In the House, Chairman Bloom of the Foreign Affairs Committee, claimed "a large majority" for House concurrence and said "the isolationists could do more than anything else to prevent war from coming to our shores at this time by unanimously passing the legislation."

Notice of O'Daniel's independent move for unanimous consent to vote now on the bill was served by the Texan shortly after the Senate met.

"I am wondering," said O'Daniel, "whether the men aboard that ship took the time to debate for days and days the question whether or not this nation was neutral."

Maloney Is Uncommitted

Maloney, uncommitted as yet on the bill, killed the move by his objection, explaining that several Senators had asked time to make speeches and a question so important warranted full debate.

Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, a supporter of the bill, told the Senate he would have objected if no one else had, so that no one could say the bill was being "railroaded."

Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, one of the suviving few who opposed Wilson's 1917 armed ship bill, told reporters he was ready to vote this week. Norris supports the bill.

Senator Brooks, first to take the floor after the O'Daniel request, said it was time for the Administration either "to stop in your tracks or declare war so that we can all go in with both arms flying."

The Illinois Republican, a leading opponent of the bill, told the Senate: "I believe that this may be the last opportunity to protest against our becoming officially all-out shooting participants in the present war.

Chiefly directing his attack at Mr. Roosevelt, Brooks said "the President and his Cabinet have been at war for some time; but the Congress has not been at war. I say the President has been at war."

Senator O'Mahoney replied that "Neutrality Act is a misnomer" because "the people of this country are not neutral in this war." The Wyoming Democrat said "all thought of neutrality was withdrawn from the act by the solemn action of the Congress of the United States."

O'Mahoney cited activities of Hitler's agents in South America and in this country and asked the Senate to face "a stark reality."

Opposing the bill, Senator Capper said the Senate would be "voting for war—undeclared naval war for a few weeks or months perhaps, but war nevertheless, if and when it votes approval of this legislation."

He predicted enactment would be followed by dispatch of an expeditionary force to Europe, Asia and Africa and said "the odds are, once we have sent this expeditionary force to Europe to participate in their age-old game of power politics and war . . . we will not come back to this new world as a free and independent Nation."

Senator McKellar, preceding Connally's announcement of the Reuben James' sinking, told the Senate it warranted instructions to Secretary of the Navy Knox "to take the Navy and clean up the seas of these assassins and pirates."

Drum Praises First Army For Progress

By Marshall Andrews

Post Staff Correspondent

Monroe, N. C., Oct. 31—Some 12,000 officers of the First Army tonight heard their commander, Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, declare that "The news in tonight's papers (the sinking of the U. S. S. Reuben James) should convince us all of the need for serious training during the time remaining before us."

Occasion for the general's warning was the critique of last week's maneuvers, which was held in the Fair Grounds here tonight.

General Drum declared he had noted "much progress" in the conduct of the war games, and indicated the improvement was general throughout all divisions participating.

The spirit of the men of the First Army, the general said, was excellent, and they had carried on, playing the game with seriousness and benefit to all ranks.

Learning to Strike

"We have acquired a facility for movement, our road discipline is good and we have learned to strike and strike hard even under black out conditions," the general said, "but we must improve and improve and improve, if we are to meet the test that seems to confront us."

After declaring that such faults as he pointed out were not intended as rebukes, but rather as helpful suggestions, the general praised a number of units for aggressiveness in fording the Rocky River, and in the employment of their artillery support.

"One thing which must improve," said the commander of America's First Army, "is the feeling of the men in the front lines. There we are seriously deficient, and I charge all commanders to correct this fault, common to all of us."

Pointing to the coming use of tanks in the final phases of the maneuvers, Gen. Drum declared that their use will show the vital necessity for road discipline in keeping routes to the front open for the free passage of antitank units.

During the general's talk, sound of halloween merriment floated over the Fair Grounds from the nearby city of Monroe, in strange contrast of the seriousness of the occasion, as America once again faced a crisis in the sinking of another American patrol boat in the Atlantic.

The closing words of the general's speech, however, indicated that the Army is fully aware of the seriousnes of the situation, for he declared "for our country and our lives, we must drive ourselves to train for the dangerous engagements whch may await us."

Battle Raging on All Fronts, Reds Report

Sevastopol Goal

Red Retreat Is Reported In Crimea

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Oct. 31.—Russian troops were reported retreating tonight in the Crimea and Donets Basin, hotly pursued by Axis infantry and German dive-bombers, but official quarters acknowledged stubborn Red resistance on the Moscow and Leningrad fronts.

The first big goal of the Germans apparently is the port of Sevastopol, 100 miles south of the Perekop Isthmus where the Germans said Russian defenses cracked two days ago.

That port is an important pivotal point for the Russian Black Sea fleet estimated to number one battleship, three cruisers, numerous destroyers, and more than 100 submarines. Its capture would anchor the German west flank for a stepping-stone drive eastward toward the Caucasus.

German planes ranged ahead to bomb an intermediate port at Yevpatoriya, and Kerch in eastern Crimea, sinking five freighters totaling 13,000 tons, the high command said.

"In the Donets Basin, also, German and allied troops successfully continued the pursuit of the defeated enemy," the communique said without naming any sectors.

Two days ago the Germans said they were only 10 miles from Rostov, turning point for a southward thrust into the Caucasus.

"On the Leningrad encirclement front several break-through attempts of the enemy were repulsed," the official announcement said. "Heavy army batteries battered war-vital objectives of Leningrad with visible effect."

Other German quarters pointed out, however, that Leningrad was not actually encircled in the usual sense of the word, acknowledging that "the Bolshevists are especially active in trying to protect that small strip of land between Leningrad and Lake Ladoga."

For eight days now the high command has not given the distances or sectors involved in the attempt to pierce Moscow's outer defense ring. At that time it said an armored spearhead had reached a position about 35 miles short of the Soviet capital.

37 German Planes Shot Down to Loss Of 18 by Russians

By the Associated Press

Moscow (Saturday), Nov. 1.—Fighting up and down the entire front from Leningrad to the Sea of Azov was reported by the Soviet information bureau early today.

"During October 31 our troops fought the enemy on all fronts," said the unusually brief communique broadcast by the Moscow radio.

In aerial operations Thursday the Russians reported destruction of 37 German planes to 18 Soviet craft.

A supplementary announcement said the Red Air Force on Thursday dispersed and partially annihilated two German infantry regiments and a cavalry squadron in an unspecified sector. These attacks were declared further to have destroyed 26 Nazi tanks, 225 trucks laden with supplies, 18 staff buses and 14 guns.

In one sector before Leningrad Soviet artillery was said to have killed and wounded more than 200 men in a surprise bombardment of two German battalions moving along a highway.

Moscow Offensive Is Reported Tiring

London, Oct. 3 (AP).—Soviet dispatches reported tonight that Adolf Hitler's supreme offensive on Moscow had fallen off today—the thirtieth day of the grand campaign which he said was to bring a great decision at the Russian center—to mere local attacks in all sectors save one.

In this single region of present active menace—that limited on its northern extremity by Kalinin, 95 miles northwest of Moscow, and extending to the south somewhere about Volokolamsk, which is 65 miles above the capital—the invader was declared still beating tirelessly at the Red line with infantry and tank charges.

But even there, said the official Soviet news agency, the advance was checked by heavy and repeated Russian counterattacks.

Break Through at Tula

Offsetting somewhat this encouraging picture was the serious situation developing at Tula, rail junction 100 miles south of Moscow, where British dispatches said a state of siege had been declared.

[The United Press reported German troops have crashed through the outer defenses of Tula, a city of 200,000, and Nazi forces also are driving through the Crimea, headed for a showdown with the Soviet Black Sea fleet, Russian reports said today.

[Fighting now is raging in the suburbs of Tula, which guards the main southern approach to Moscow, and the Soviets are laying down such a withering artillery and machine-gun fire that the Germans show signs of weakening, the Moscow radio said.]

Action Still Heavy

The Red air arm was said to be still in heavy action in this area, reporting the destruction in recent operations of 14 German planes at a single improvised airdrome near Kalinin.

In other sectors, and especially to the west and southwest of the capital, the Red armies were said not only to be holding their positions but in some sectors to have extended them.

In spite of apparently great improvement in the Russian situation at the center, however, Soviet silence suggested that matters were going badly for the defenders in the south and more especially in the Crimea, where the Germans claimed to be still advancing in pursuit of retreating forces, and in the direction of Sevastopol, the Soviet Black Sea naval base.

Center May Be Static

All this recalled previous impressions of belief by some qualified observers that Hitler was progressively turning his striking power to the south, perhaps seeing the center as a front likely to be relatively static during the winter.

Not, in several days, had Russian communiques made important mention of the Ukrainian section, save for acknowledging last Wednesday the fall of Kharkov in the upper Ukraine, an important industrial city, but one far removed from the more powerful German drives toward Rostov on the River Don and into the Crimea.

A supplement to today's communique did report, however, that on an unstated sector of the southern front, Red cavalry had annihilated two German regiments in a battle for a town identified only as "Z."

Palestine Bans Private U. S. Imports

Copyright by New York Times

Jerusalem, Palestine, Oct. 31.—Effective immediately, the Palestine government announces today the discontinuance of individual import licenses for supplies to this country of a number of commodities that are imported from the United States. At the same time, limited supplies will be made available from here by the Palestine government provided they are necessary to ensure a maximum war effort by Palestine or to maintain the life of the civil community on a wartime basis. Supplies thus obtained will be reissued by the local administration to manufacturers and merchants.

These supplies comprise agricultural machines, iron and steel including alloy steel, machine tools and bearings, motor vehicles, nonferrous metals, plant machinery, timber; condensed and powdered milk, paper board, tobacco and wood pulp.

The government notice explains that these restrictions are due to the need of coordination arising from the increased control over production and exports exercised by the United States and on the other hand, to the necessity of ensuring the most economical use of the supplies that are obtainable from that country. Consequently, individual orders placed since September first in America for the listed articles will not be executed nor will further individual import licenses be issued.

The notice announces special arrangements, including the cabling of import license number to consignors in America, for effective shipments. In America, consignors must contact the colonial supply liaison at the British consulate general in New York with the number of the Palestinian import license.

Similar arrangements, limiting imports, will apply to the United Kingdom.

Spy Suspect Says Gestapo Hounded Him for Bombsight

By Pat McGrady
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 31.—His face swollen by weeks of weeping, Hermann Lang, 40, one of 15 men on trial for espionage conspiracy, testified today that he was hounded by Gestapo agents in Germany and that they threatened to harm his family if he had lied in denying knowledge of the American Norden bombsight.

Lang, an inspector in the Carl L. Norden concern, said he took his wife to Germany on June 9, 1938, returned to New York the following September 23, and advised his employer that a doctor had ordered the trip for his wife for her health.

The Government charged that while there he sold particulars of the Norden bombsight.

Eight weeks before leaving New York, Lang testified, he encountered a fellow Norden worker, Fritz Sohn, on the street with a man introduced to Lang as Nikolaus Ritter, a visiting German textile engineer. During their brief conversation, Lang said he mentioned that he intended to go to Germany.

"At Cuxhaven the customs agent made me take out everything I had in all our trunks," said Lang. "I asked the reason for this, and he said he had been ordered to do so.

"The officer said, 'If you don't like it here, why didn't you stay in America?'"

Lang testified that he and his wife had to sign a paper stating where they would live in Berlin. Ritter wrote him there, he said, asking him to meet him the next day, and at the meeting Ritter introduced him to a Mr. Beyer.

"Ritter told me his real name was Ranzau (mentioned in the indictment as the coconspirator who organized the espionage ring in America).

"Beyer said, 'Ranzau told me you work in a factory which makes instruments.'

"Ritter said, 'He works at Norden, who makes bombsights.'

"I had never mentioned this to anyone. I told them I work on parts, but don't know what they are.

"Beyer said, 'as far as I know, you work on bombsights, do you know what a finished one looks like?'

"I said I never yet saw a finished one.

"Beyer grew angry. He said to Ritter, 'do you think we have the time and money to spend, when all he knows is parts?' We need finished products.'

"When we came outside Ritter said, 'that fellow Beyer is my boss. If you don't talk, you know what's going to happen to me.'

"I said, 'I told the truth.'

"Ritter said, 'if I find out you didn't speak the truth, it will be pretty hard for your relatives.'"

Few French Able to Obey DeGaulle Plea

By the Associated Press

Vichy, Unoccupied France, Oct. 31.—French supporters of Petain and the new order turned their backs today on Gen. Charles De Gaulle's plea for a five-minute standstill protest against the execution of French hostages by the Germans.

There, obviously, were at least isolated instances of obedience to the summons of the London Leader, as at Vichy, where five men and a woman stood as inconspicuously as possible on the main square, watching the clock in the tower of the Church of St. Louis tick off the minutes from 4 to 4:05 p. m.

Around this little group traffic passed as usual. No one seemed to notice the six.

The extent of the response by other Frenchmen in the unoccupied zone could not be judged impartially, but at least there were no reports of untoward incidents. The occupied zone was, as usual, a dead spot in independent communications.

[A D. N. B. dispatch from Paris to Berlin said the streets of that occupied capital presented their usual appearance at the appointed time and that no incidents had been reported by early evening.]

If what could be seen of Vichy's response was typical the De Gaullist call was a failure in the unoccupied zone.

What could be learned of the response bore out the previous conclusion of most Vichy observers that it was unlikely to become widespread because less than half the population knew of the appeal and the others were unable to comply without danger of arrest.

[De Gaulle's move found fertile ground in the camp of Frenchmen and allied sympathizers, from Shanghai to French Canada, from Alexandria, Egypt, to Uruguay. The union jack and the tri-color were half-staffed. British warships at Alexandria dipped ther colors and French warships interned there were invited to follow suit. Whether they did had not yet been reported.

[But if the edge of De Gaulle's propaganda was blunted in Vichy, France, it was owing in part to the fact that the Petain regieme had made obedience to the call a virtual plea of guilty to listening to "antinational" broadcasts. Only Thursday such listening had been made a crime punishable by fines of $200 and imprisonment up to two years.]

Roosevelt Arrives At Hyde Park

Hyde Park, N. Y., Oct. 31 (AP).—President Roosevelt arrived tonight at his country estate, where Canadian Prime Minister W. L. MacKenzie King will join him tomorrow for a short visit.

The President came from Washington by special train. A telephone was connected with his private car as the train paused at dusk at Claremont, N. J., to determine from Washington whether any new reports had been received on the sinking of the destroyer Reuben James.

U. S. Risking War, Tokyo Paper Warns

By the United Press

Tokyo, Saturday, Nov. 1.—If the United States means to avoid war in the Pacific, now is the time for Washington to give "serious consideration to Japan's determination," the influential newspaper Nichi Nichi said editorially today.

The editorial asserted that there is a limit to Japan's patience and that Nippon may be compelled to take decisive action unless progress is made in Japanese-American negotiations.

Speaking of President Roosevelt's "procrastination" in connection with negotiations with Japan, the editorial said he was "sowing the seeds of catastrophe in the Southwestern Pacific. It may even develop into world chaos."

Pointing out that the oil issue requires speedy settlement, Nichi Nichi said that, if Japan no longer is able to get oil from the United States or the Netherlands East Indies, "Japan will have to obtain it by extraordinary means, even if it should prove dangerous, because a modern state like Japan cannot exist without oil. This would be legitimate exercise of the self-defense right."

Move Into Thailand Rumored

[N. B. C.'s correspondent in Manila reported that "unconfirmed but persistent rumors in Manila say that the Japanese army already has crossed the border into Thailand."]

The editorial added that, while the new Tojo cabinet is taking a cautious attitude in conducting negotiations with America, it has "already dispelled the 'sitting-on-the-fence' atmosphere, expressed stern determination and completed all preparations to propel our immutable national policy."

Japan is ready to undertake mediation of the Russo-German war if an opportunity can be found, the English language newspaper, Japan Times and Advertiser, which usually reflects the views of the foreign office, said today in an editorial.

The editorial, a continuation of one started yesterday, appeared to be part of a program to explain the immediate background of the international situation to the Japanese people in advance of the opening of the special session of Parliament November 15. Japanese-American relations, it was indicated, will be a chief subject of discussion at the five-day session and it was believed the government was attempting to consolidate public opinion behind whatever moves it may find opportune.

Other newspapers urged Foreign Minister Shigenori Togo immediately to begin negotiations with Russia for the settlement of all pending Russo-Japanese differences.

Tax on Smokes Goes Up

Tokyo (Saturday) Nov. 1 (AP).—The finance ministry today raised cigarette taxes from 7 to 40 per cent and cigar taxes from 60 to 100 per cent, effective immediately.

These increases follow a cabinet decision to raise taxes generally, both to augment revenue and curtail use of tobacco, which has been gaining greatly since the outbreak of the China conflict, the ministry announced.

A general tax schedule to be introduced at the special Diet November 15 will include sizable increases on such items as sake, sugar, hotel bills, railway tickets, amusements and luxuries.

Gamelin, Blum, Daladier Face Trial Jan. 15

Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, Oct. 31.—General Maurice Gamelin and former Premiers Leon Blum and Edouard Daladier will be called to trial before the Supreme Court at Riom on January 15, 1941. Minister of Justice Joseph Barthelemy announced that date for the opening of the trial for responsibility for the French defeat to the Council of Ministers here today.

Selection of this date means that internment of the accused men in the mountain fortress of Portalet will be of short duration. The preparations at Portalet are not yet completed and it will be necessary to bring the defendants to Riom at least a few days before the trial begins.

When Marshal Petain recently announced his decision to confine the three chief defendants and former Premier Paul Reynaud and former Minister of Interior Georges Mandel in a fortified place, he said that the Riom Court would continue with its plans for the hearing. The marshal ordered that every effort should be made to hasten proceedings.

In a recent interview Barthelemy indicated that the trial when it opens will require many sessions before there would be a verdict. Two or three months are expected to be consumed in the hearing of evidence. The prosecution has cited 650 witnesses and probably as many, if not more, may be called for the defense. The case for the prosecution covers 1000 typewritten pages.

It is still uncertain whether MM. Reynaud and Mandel will appear on the defendants' bench. Marshal Petain implied that an indictment had been stated against them and his action in ordering them confined in a fortress would indicate the probability of their being tried. For the moment they are still administratively interned in a first-class hotel at Vals-Les-Bains. Gen. Gamelin and Premiers Blum and Daladier are at Bourrassol Manor near Riom. Guy La Chambre, the former air minister, and Pierre Jacomet, secretary general of the war ministry, are also there and will remain interned at Bourrassol until the Riom court opens, since mitigating circumstances in their cases were recognized in Marshal Petain's judgment.

The Riom court was created as one of the first acts of the Petain government after its establishment at Vichy. Gen. Gamelin, Blum, Daladir, La Chambre, and Pierre Cot, the latter now a fugitive in America, were all indicted August 1, 1940.

War Sidelights

Trichinosis Creeps Into Nazis' Ranks

Berlin, Oct. 31 (AP).—Trichinosis, intestinal and muscular disease caused by eating infected pork, has reinvaded Germany, presumably from the occupied areas, after having been almost unknown in the country in recent decades.

A public warning was issued today cautioning against use of canned and fresh pork from occupied countries, where it was said meat inspection is lax or nonexistent. The announcement continued:

"Bootleg pork"—that obtained illegally without ration cards—may prove deadly because there has been no trichinosis inspection.

Nazis Spread Poison Smoke

Moscow, Oct. 31 (INS).—German warplanes are spreading clouds of poisonous smoke over Russian battlefields and towns, the Soviet army newspaper Red Star charged tonight.

The poisonous smoke is formed by a chemical which is released from the Luftwaffe planes, Red Star claimed. On contact with the air, this chemical produces clouds of lethal smoke comparable to gas clouds of the World War.

Back to Back

Ankara, Turkey, Oct. 31 (U.P.).—Another international entanglement:

Mrs. John O'Donnel, wife of the British naval attache, and Mrs. Franz von Papen, wife of the German ambassador, suddenly found themselves face to face in a ballroom here Wednesday night during a republic day ball. Each turned away immediately but dancers whirling by jostled them together and brocade on the backs of their dresses became entangled.

Capt. O'Donnel looked on helplessly until a Turkish official finally succeeded in untangling the brocade.

Not a word was spoken between the principals or between other Britons and Germans who watched the incident.

Planes Out of Ashes

London, Oct. 31 (AP)—Out of the ashes of the Cafe de Paris, where 84 persons were killed by a bomb last March, have come five new Spitfire planes for use against the Germans.

They were paid for by a contribution to the Spitfire fund of £25,000 (about $100,000) derived from the sale of wines, which escaped damage in the cellar of the West End night spot.

New War Taxes in Berlin

Berlin, Oct. 31 (AP).—Big war tax increases will be added to the prices of tobacco and liquors beginning Monday. Secretary of State Fritz Reinhardt said the increases were intended to reduce consumption.

Beer, as the drink of the "small man," will not be affected.

Reports Attempt on Life

Ankara, Oct. 31 (U.P.).—Sir Hughe M. Knatchbull-Hugessen, British Ambassador to Turkey, revealed tonight that three men hurled a fist-sized rock at him yesterday in an apparent attempt on his life.

He said the men apparently had used a large sling to propel the missile from a hillside overlooking the tennis court at the British embassy.

[Sir Hughe, while Ambassador to China, was wounded severely on August 26, 1937, when a Japanese plane machine-gunned an embassy automobile 50 miles from Shanghai.]

Held in Nazi Camp

Shreveport, La., Oct. 31 (AP).—A postcard received here by R. E. McDonald informed him that his son, C. E. McDonald, 23, is being held in a Nazi prison camp.

The card, written by young McDonald, a Royal Canadian Air Force flier, was the first direct word received by his family since he was reported missing after a sweep over France August 19.

His card said that "I guess I am in for the duration . . . We have nothing to do but eat and sleep, but are safe." It did not tell where he is in Germany.

Memorial Rite Pays Tribute To Brandeis

Justice Louis Brandeis' "passionate devotion to freedom" was extolled last night by Lawrence Koenigsberger, addressing memorial services to the jurist at Beth Sholom Synagogue, Eighth and Shepherd Streets Northwest.

The speaker is president of the American Jewish Congress and vice president of the American Zionists.

Justice Brandeis' entire life was dominated by the principle of freedom, he said, including "freedom to the small-business man from the ruthless competition of huge and powerful competitors; freedom to the public from oppression in the form of excessive charges for the necessities of life, and freedom from too much power vested in officials of government."

The speaker said Brandeis also fought for "freedom of labor to combine for the enforcement of its rights against employers so powerful that an individual is important in his dealings with them; and freedom of speech, so that a man can develop and express his soul, and seek for even greater freedom."

Other speakers were Fred M. Vinson, associate justice of the United States Court of Appeals, and Aaron Shalowitz.

Another Brandeis memorial service was conducted at Ohev Sholom Synagogue by Rabbi Zemach Green and Cantor I. Flosberg. Louis Spiegler, of Washington, president of the Zionist regional organization, spoke.

The Washington Zionists' Brandeis memorial service scheduled for Monday night at Central High School, was postponed until a later date, it was announced yesterday.

R. A. F. Batters Power Centers, French Plants

London, Oct. 31. — Royal Air Force fighter squadrons lashed German-occupied Northern France today in an offensive sweep which battered power stations and factories and set three small enemy coastal vessels ablaze. Two and possibly three Nazi bombers were shot down off the British east coast.

The air ministry communique announcing the sweep revealed that it was still under way after dark with Spitfires, American-made Caribous (Airacobras) and new-type Hurricanes speeding across the Straits of Dover despite stormy weather.

One of the Nazi bombers was shot down at dusk and the second was destroyed a short time later. A third was hit and believed so badly damaged it could not regain the occupied coast.

During the day Nazi bombers were active in the vicinity of two Northwestern English towns, and around dusk some bombs were dropped near an East Anglia port. All of them, however, fell harmlessly into the sea.

In the offensive sweep the R. A. F. fighters attacked an electrical transformer station in one unidentified northern French town, factory buildings and railway yards in another and barges plying canals.

Two British fighter planes failed to return, the ministry stated.

British Bomb Crete

Cairo, Oct. 31 (AP).—Suda Bay and the port of Herakleion in the strategic eastern Mediterranean island of Crete were attacked by British bombers Wednesday night, the British Middle East command announced today.

The British bombed their targets despite bad weather, a communique said, although clouds prevented observation of full results. A direct hit was seen on one merchant ship, it was said.

The Libyan towns and ports of Tripoli, Bengasi, Bardia and Tmimi also were bombed on a night of relatively extensive operations.

British Radio Station Hit

Berlin, Oct. 31 (INS).—Long-range German bombers last night and early today scored hits on a British radio station in the Faroe Islands and bombed the ports of Great Yarmouth and Falmouth, it was officially announced tonight.

Steel Priority System Will Be Revamped

The Supply Priorities and Allocations Board announced yesterday that the priority system now being used by defense and nondefense industries in obtaining steel was inadequate and therefore it had directed the office of production management to work out a system whereby distribution of steel in the future will be made by direct allocation.

Under the new plan the OPM will determine the amount of steel available for all demands. Then, competing demands will be weighed and the Government will advise manufacturers of the amounts of steel they may deliver to their customers.

SPAB's action was taken after Army and Navy officials had pointed out that increasing problems in connection with deliveries of structural steel, nickel steel, high-speed steel, tool steel and steel plate for defense purposes could no longer be solved properly through the priorities system alone.

Distribution Sought

The primary purpose of the step, SPAB emphasized, is to "assure distribution of the available supply where it will do the most good." Operation of the existing priorities system does not provide an adequate check against hoarding and the accumulation of excessive inventories, SPAB pointed out.

The system will be developed through joint operation by several groups within OPM—principally the division of priorities, the division of civilian supply and the iron and steel branch of the division of materials. It was emphasized that because of the size and complexity of the task it would take some time and a considerable staff to work out the respective allocations of varieties of steel products.

Other Developments

Other steel developments yesterday included:

A warning by A. D. Whiteside, chief of the iron and steel branch of OPM that "a serious shortage of iron and steel scrap is imminent and some steel production has already been lost because of a lack of this vital raw material."

An appeal to the railroads by a half dozen Government departments and agencies requesting a reduction in freight rates on iron and steel shipments by all rail routes to the Pacific Coast "in the interest of national defense and price stability." The joint request came from the War and Navy Departments, OPM, Office of Price Administration, Maritime Commission, and the Treasury Department's Procurement Division.

Announcement by Donald M. Nelson, director of priorities that steel mills reached an all-time weekly production high during the week of October 6 of 1,621,000 tons.

'Twas Fine Night For Britain's Black Phantoms

London, Oct. 31 (U.P.).—Britons speculated tonight on whether the "Black Phantoms" might be out celebrating Hallomas Eve (Halloween) on the French invasion coast, snatching up hapless German sentries and cutting their throats.

It was pointed out that such a night, when ghosts and goblins mythically roam, might be psychologically ideal for the "phantoms," who are generally believed to be the crack, tough "commando" troops Britain has trained for invasion and guerrilla work on the Continent. They have been reported active on recent dark nights along the French coast, leaving headless German bodies along the beaches to mark their visits.

Today, appropriately, it was revealed officially that the "commandos" wear black battle dress, special black skull caps, special boots which enable them to steal through the darkness as silently as ghosts, and that their hands and faces are blackened when they go on assignments.

side the curb line beside the telegraph pole when the car's rear end crashed the pole just north of the driveway to a filling station on the east side of the highway.

The people of the neighborhood, wondering who he was, supposed he might have been to a Halloween party at the Woodridge School, two blocks away. Teachers from the school, however, could not identify him. Filling station attendants saw him coming along, eating a piece of candy. They remembered that he wore a pair of short leather riding boots and tan cowboy breeches with a gray sweater. But as they found him, his skull was fractured, his left leg broken and he was hurt internally.

The word spreading of the death through the neighborhood, many parents called at Casualty Hospital, where the body first was taken. But they left no names. Also school teachers dropped by—but they, too, could not say who the little victim was.

Firemen Put Out Blaze

Divirgilio was treated for undetermined head injuries while Weldin was given first aid for minor cuts and bruises. Divirgilio was thrown from the sedan by the impact and Weldin escaped before the car burned. The crushed gasoline tank burst into flame and firemen had to extinguish it. The frame of the car, police reported, was knocked 2½ feet out of line. The driver and his companion are both plumbers, engaged in defense housing work in Anacostia.

The city's seventy-ninth traffic victim of the year was William Scott, 35, of 1031 Euclid Street Northwest. A hit-and-run driver struck him in the 1300 block of Fourth Street Northwest. He was pronounced dead at Casualty Hospital.

Another victim of Washington traffic yesterday was Edward S. Bartlett, 32, of 405 A Street Southeast, a restaurant cook.

He died at Casualty Hospital of a broken back received Thursday night when he was knocked down by an automobile at Pennsylvania and North Carolina Avenues Southeast.

Hit Crossing Avenue

He was crossing North Carolina Avenue from the west to the east curb, police said, when he was struck by an automobile operated south by Joseph W. Rollins, 24, of 454 New Jersey Avenue Southeast.

The driver will appear at a coroner's inquest, the date of which has not been announced.

A cab driver and two passengers in his machine also were injured in a collision with a truck at First and N Streets Northwest.

Edward F. Rhodes, 38, of 449 Irving Street Northwest, driver of the taxi, received a sprained back. The passengers were Barbara Lewis, 18, of Palmyra, N. Y., who suffered a broken left shoulder, and Louise Weinberg, 18, of Atlanta, Ga., who received facial injuries.

All of the injured were treated at Casualty Hospital. Police said the truck was operated by Edwin C. Deal, 23, of 1723 Lang Place Northeast.

Robert Graul, 12, son of George Graul, of Burtonsville, Md., suffered a cut jugular vein last night when an automobile operated by his cousin, Elwood Renn, 17, of Burtonsville, had a head-on collision with another car near Ashton.

Held Wound Together

The Graul boy was taken to the Montgomery County General Hospital at Sandy Spring by a passing motorist. The Renn boy told hospital authorities he had "held the wound together" on the way to the hospital. Dr. J. W. Bird, head of the hospital, treated the boy and said he believed him out of danger later.

In a collision at Fourth Street and New York Avenue Northeast, that threw one of the cars 210 feet, Atha Henson, 35, of 36 Quincy Place Northwest, was seriously injured and four others received only minor hurts. Henson was one of three passengers in a car driven by John Smith, 41, of 405 Richardson Street Northwest. It was struck by another car which police said was driven by Bernard M. Dirsuliitis, 20, of 1810 Kalorama Road Northwest.

Ickes-Jones Rift Reported

By the Associated Press

Interior Secretary Ickes, defense investigators heard yesterday, has accused his fellow Cabinet member, Jesse Jones, of an attempt at "forcing my hand into the signing of a contract that would not be in the public interest."

This accusation was contained in a letter written by Ickes to Jones, Federal loan administrator and Secretary of Commerce, on September 2, protesting a contract between the Defense Plant Corporation and the Aluminum Co. of America for construction and operation of new production facilities.

"Frankly," Ickes wrote his colleague, "I would be reflecting on your intelligence if I supposed for a minute that you did not have in mind the dilemma in which I would find myself when the demand was made upon me to sign on the dotted line an onerous and unconscionable contract or run the risk of possible condemnation by the unthinking for not having done so."

One of the plants to be constructed under the contract would be located in the Bonneville-Grand Coulee Dam area and would depend upon Federal power for its operation.

Ickes' letter was put into the record of the Senate Defense Investigating Committee, which also heard testimony from Alcoa officials that a new contract was being negotiated to replace the present one, and that modification of some of the provisions to which Ickes objected was being considered by the negotiators.

Earlier, Oscar Ewing, Alcoa counsel, testified that Alcoa was making more aluminum than it could sell and had added 30 million pounds to its reserves.

Ewing asserted that the interests of the Government were "fully protected" under the present contract.

I. J. Wilson, Alcoa vice president, testified that his company had been prepared to finance expansion of production with its own funds, but that the Government had preferred use of Federal funds.

"Alcoa," he declared, "is still ready to proceed to the extent of its ability in expansion on its own account."

Ickes listed these objections to the contract, among others:

"The production control provisions of the lease strengthen and extend the monopolistic position of the aluminum company.

"The profit which Alcoa would realize for operation of the plants under this contract seems to be exceedingly generous.

"Defense Plant Corporation's prospective profits seem equally startling."

Ewing told the committee that the company had undertaken to make the contract "so fair that it couldn't be criticized," but "apparently we haven't succeeded."

"You haven't succeeded," Truman told him. "This contract strikes me as being a unilateral agreement."

Farm Bloc Delays Report On Prices Bill

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

An intracommittee skirmish over all-important farm price provisions last night held over until today—and, perhaps, longer—a defense inflation-control bill that was to have been reported to the House yesterday.

House Banking Committee debate centered on a provision of the bill which would permit the Administration to buy or sell commodities for the purpose of subsidizing marginal producers or preventing price increases.

Farm bloc members saw in the provision a sanction from Congress for the Administration to dispose of its huge stocks of agricultural products, and committee members freely predicted that this section of the bill is scheduled for drastic modification or elimination altogether.

Seeks to Redate Base

During the morning session, it was learned, the committee accepted an amendment, backed by Representative Steagall (Democrat), of Alabama, the chairman, to change the "base date" for prices from July 29 to October 1 of this year. One of the aims of the bill would be to maintain prices at the general level prevailing on the "base date."

One committee member, it was understood, objected to the proposal on the ground that prices have risen an average of 5 per cent since the committee started hearings on the bill last August. Steagall said he preferred the later date because it would be closer to the time of adoption of the bill.

Gore Renews Fight

Representative Gore (Democrat), of Tennessee, last night served notice that he has "by no means" dropped his determination to fight for inclusion of wage ceilings in the bill. Gore Thursday offered an amendment for over-all ceilings on all commodity prices and lost, 16 to 5.

The so-called Administration bill, said Gore, author of a substitute measure stipulating blanket ceilings, "confers upon the price administrator the authority to do the over-all job, with the exception of wages, which my bill will do by law."

In support of this contention, Gore quoted from Thursday night's speech of Price Administrator Leon Henderson:

"If it becomes clear that the select method (proposed by the Administration) is not completely effective, the overall ceiling can be imposed under the same authority and without further legislation."

Before the committee completes reading of the bill, Gore declared, he will offer amendments calling not only for wage ceilings, but for recapture of all defense industry profits over 8 per cent. If these proposals should be rejected, he will then offer his substitute bill as an amendment to the entire Administration measure.

Long Delay Possible

It is possible that a fortnight may elapse before a price bill finally is reported to the House. If the committee fails to reach agreement today it may be necessary to postpone further consideration until the week after next because of the desire of many members to return to their home districts for local elections.

"We are fighting along trying to get out a bill today," said Steagall. "That is all I can say."

Before the committee quit for the day it defeated overwhelmingly an amendment offered by Representative Sumner (Republican), of Illinois, to exempt luxuries from price control.

Secretary Knox will address the third officers' candidates' class at its graduation exercises to be held in the Marine Corps School at Quantico, Va., today.

Three hundred college graduates who have been attending the school since July 1 will be commissioned second lieutenants in the Marine Reserves. They are to be ordered to active duty.

Maj. Gen. Commandant Thomas Holcomb of the Marine Corps will attend the exercises.

Roosevelt Leaves For Hyde Park

President Roosevelt departed by special train yesterday for his home at Hyde Park, N. Y., where W. L. Mackenzie King, Canadian prime minister, will be a weekend guest.

Crown Princess Juliana of the Netherlands and her two children also will be weekend guests at Hyde Park.

The Chief Executive expected to be back in the Capital Wednesday, after voting Tuesday in the local election at the old town hall in Hyde Park village.

Municipal Employes Meet To Plan Chest Drive Support

Preliminary guns in the 1942 Community Chest Campaign were fired yesterday when more than 100 municipal department heads and their employes met with the Commissioners in the District Building board room.

City workers were urged "more than ever" to lend support to the drive for two million dollars which begins officially November 13 and runs through November 27.

"I don't need to tell you of the necessity for supporting this movement," said Commissioner John Russell Young in opening the meeting. "We are proud of our record in the past and we want to be proud of it again this time."

Heads to Take Lead

Department chiefs, said Commissioner Young, will act as before in the capacities of key men and women for the District government campaign.

Clifford Folger, general chairman of the city-wide drive, described the annual Chest program as "the glue which holds the community together" and appealed to his listeners to "chip in and help those less fortunate."

Washington's defense picture makes it doubly necessary for every citizen to join the fight against poverty and suffering, said Herbert Willett, Community Chest director.

Need Not Lessened

The fact that Washington is experiencing prosperity, said Willett, doesn't mean that there is less need for welfare activities.

"Persons in hospitals," he added, "are not helped by boom times."

Thomas Lodge, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, was named head of a special bureau to furnish speakers to the various municipal departments.

The meeting concluded with the showing of a motion picture on Community Chest activities entitled "For Freedom."

Daniels Gives Up Embassy Post in Mexico

President Roosevelt yesterday accepted the resignation of Josephus Daniels, Ambassador to Mexico, and the President's "chief" of World War days at the Navy Department.

Daniels, who will be 80 next May, wrote Mr. Roosevelt that his wife's physicians do not feel that she can continue with the duties of hostess at the American Embassy in Mexico City.

The President replied that it was "a real shock" to learn that the country would be deprived of Daniels' services and praised the envoy as one "who perhaps, more than anyone else, has exemplified the true spirit of the good neighbor in the foreign field."

Is An Editor

Daniels, a North Carolina editor and prominent Democrat for nearly half a century, served as Secretary of the Navy under President Wilson and became an intimate friend of his youthful Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt. In 1933, as President, Mr. Roosevelt named Daniels to represent the United States in Mexico City, where he is now dean of the Diplomatic Corps.

The retiring Ambassador, who lunched with Mr. Roosevelt at the White House Thursday, will fly from his home in Raleigh, N. C., to Mexico City Sunday to spend a week in winding up busines at the Embassy.

No Hint on Successor

President Roosevelt yesterday declined to give his press conference any hints as to Daniels' successor. Secretary of State Hull, when questioned by reporters on a suggestion that R. Henry Norweb, American Ambassador to Peru, might take the Mexican post, said he would rather not mention any names since that might lead to disappointment for him or the individuals under discussion.

To Work on Memoirs

Daniels told reporters here he plans to spend several months completing the third volume of his memoirs, which will deal with his experiences during the Wilson Administration. Two earlier volumes, called "Tarheel Editor," are devoted to his public life in North Carolina. He said yesterday he is considering a fourth volume covering the Roosevelt Administration.

He and Mrs. Daniels will make their home in Raleigh, where three of their sons are connected with the newspaper he brought to national prominence, The News and Observer. A fourth son, Dr. Worth B. Daniels, lives in Washington.

Secretary Hull said yesterday he had learned with very deep regret of Daniels' resignation. He praised the envoy's work in implementing the good neighbor policy and said Daniels had made a very remarkable record of service during half a century as an outstanding figure in American public life.

Daniels, who has never run for office, but has held appointive positions under every Democratic President elected in his life time, took his first Federal position in 1893, when President Cleveland appointed him chief clerk of the Interior Department.

Navy Transfers Medical Captains

Clifton, from Naval Hospital, Puget Sound Navy Yard, to Naval Hospital, Mare Island; Daniel Hunt, from Navy Yard, Washington, to Naval Hospital, Puget Sound Navy Yard; Virgil H. Carson, from Naval Dispensary, San Francisco, to Naval Hospital, Pearl Harbor. T. H.; John T. Bennett, from Naval Hospital, Pearl Harbor, to Naval Hospital, Newport, R. I.

Army Completes Greatest Modern Building Project

The War Department announced yesterday that the greatest building project of modern times, providing quarters for the American Army, has been completed in less than nine months.

The announcement was based on the annual report of the construction division, office of the quartermaster general, covering the period from July 1, 1940, to July 1, 1941.

The program involved 459 projects, including new ordnance plants, chemical warfare plants, hospitals, storage depots, quartermaster depots and new airfields.

Total estimated cost has passed two billion dollars.

"COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME"
HENRY ALFORD

Come, ye thankful people, come
Raise the song of Harvest-home:
All is safely gathered in
Ere the winter storms begin;
God, our Maker, doth provide
For our wants to be supplied;
Come to God's own temple, come,

Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS

Every harvest season congregations everywhere lift their voices high to sing this favorite hymn of Thanksgiving. It was published in 1844 in a volume of poems by the author, then Dean of Canterbury.

Dr. Arthur P. Black, of Luther Place Memorial Church and executive secretary of the Lutheran Laymen's movement, will be toastmaster.

Berlin Diary

Berlin Bombed

(August 26-September 7, 1940)

BERLIN, August 26, 1940.—We had our first big air raid of the war last night. The sirens sounded at 12:30 a. m. and the all-clear came at 3:23 a. m. For the first time British bombers came directly over the city, and they dropped bombs.

SHIRER

The concentration of antiaircraft fire was the greatest I've ever witnessed. It provided a magnificent, a terrible sight. And it was strangely ineffective. Not a plane was brought down; not one was even picked up by the searchlights, which flashed back and forth frantically across the skies throughout the night.

The Berliners are stunned. They did not think it could happen. When this war began, Goering boasted that no enemy planes could ever break through the outer and inner rings of the capital's antiaircraft defense. The Berliners are a naive and simple people. They believed him.

Goering made matters worse by informing the population only three days ago that they need not go to their cellars when the sirens sounded, but only when they heard the flak going off nearby. The implication was that it would never go off. And then last night the guns all over the city suddenly began pounding and you could hear the British motors humming directly overhead, and from all reports there was a pell-mell, frightened rush to the cellars by the five million people who live in this town.

I was at the Rundfunk writing my broadcast when the sirens sounded, and almost immediately the bark of the flak began. I was scheduled to speak at 1 a. m. To get to the studio to broadcast we have to leave the building where we write our scripts and have them censored, and dash some 200 yards through a blacked-out vacant lot to the sheds where the microphones are.

As I stepped out of the building at five minutes to one, the light guns protecting the radio station began to fire away wildly. At this moment I heard a softer but much more ominous sound. It was like hail falling on a tin roof. You could hear it dropping through the trees and on the roofs of the sheds. It was shrapnel from the antiaircraft guns. For the first time in my life I wished I had a steel helmet.

I hesitated in the shelter of the doorway. In two or three minutes now my broadcast would begin. I made a dash for it, running blindly, frightenedly down the path, stumbling down the wooden stairway where the terrace was. I crashed into the corner of a shed and sprawled into the sand. The sound of the shrapnel falling all around egged me on. One last dash and I made the studio door.

In the studio cell the engineer requested me to speak very close to the microphone. He did not say why, but the reason was obvious. The closer to the mike I spoke, the less "outside" noise would be picked up. But I wanted the guns to be heard in America. The censors had allowed me to pronounce only one sentence about the raid, merely stating that one was on.

Today the bombing is the one topic of conversation among Berliners. It's especially amusing therefore to see that Goebbels has permitted the local newspapers to publish only a six-line communique about it, to the effect that enemy planes flew over the capital, dropped a few incendiary bombs on two suburbs, and damaged one wooden hut in a garden. There is not a line about the explosive bombs which we all plainly heard. Nor is there a word about the three streets in Berlin which have been roped off all day to prevent the curious from seeing what a bomb can do to a house.

It will be interesting to watch the reaction of the Berliners to the efforts of the authorities to hush up the extent of the raid. It's the first time they've been able to compare what actually happened with what Dr. Goebbels reported.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—The British came over in force again last night and for the first time killed Germans in the capital of the Reich. I think the populace is more affected by the fact that the British planes have been able to penetrate to the center of Berlin without trouble than they are by the first casualties. For the first time the war has been brought home to them. If the British keep this up, it will have a tremendous effect upon the morale of the people here.

Goebbels today suddenly changed his tactics. His orders after the first big bombing were to play the story down in the press. Today he orders the newspapers to cry out at the "brutality" of the British fliers in attacking the defenseless women and children of Berlin. One must keep in mind that the people here have not yet been told of the murderous bombings of London by the Luftwaffe. The little Doktor makes the papers drum into the people that German planes attack only military objectives in Britain.

I had my own troubles at the radio last night. First, the censors announced that we could no longer mention a raid while it was on. Secondly, I got into somewhat of a row with the German radio officials. As soon as I had finished my broadcast, they ordered me to the cellar. I tried to explain that I had come here as a war correspondent and that in ordering me to the cellar they were preventing me from exercising my profession. We exchanged some rather sharp words.

Lord Haw-Haw, I notice, is the only other person around here except the very plucky girl secretaries who does not rush to the shelter after the siren sounds. I have avoided him for a year, but have been thinking lately it might be wise to get acquainted with the traitor. In the air raids he has shown guts.

BERLIN, Sept. 1.—Today the high command announces officially that the British fliers last night were "hindered" from dropping their bombs by the splendid work of the capital's antiaircraft guns, and that the only bombs dropped therefore fell outside the city limits. This is strange because the Tiergarten was roped off today and this evening the press admits that several "bomb craters" were discovered in the park after last night's raid.

The main effect of a week of constant British night bombings has been to spread great disillusionment among the people here. One said to me today, "I'll never believe another thing they say. If they've lied about the raids in the rest of Germany as they have about the ones on Berlin, then it must have been pretty bad there."

Actually, the British bombings have not been very deadly. The British are using too few planes—15 or 20 a night—and they have to come too far to carry really effective, heavy loads of bombs. Main effect is a moral one, and if the British are smart they'll keep them up every night.

BERLIN, Sept. 2.—I learned today that the Germans you see removing time bombs are for the most part prisoners from concentration camps. If they live through the experience, they are promised release. As a matter of fact it probably is an easy choice for them. Even death is a welcome release from the tortures of the Gestapo.

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—Last night we had the biggest and most effective bombing of the war. The sky over the north-central part of Berlin was lit up by two great fires. The biggest was in the freight house of the Lehrter railroad station. Another railroad station at the Schussendorfstrasse also was hit. A rubber factory, I'm told, was set afire.

Despite this the high command said in its communique today: "The enemy again attacked the German capital last night, causing some damage to persons and property as a result of his indiscriminate throwing of bombs on nonmilitary targets in the middle of the city. The German air force, as reprisal, has therefore begun to attack London with strong forces."

Not a hint here—and the German people do not know of it—that the Germans have been dropping bombs in the very center of London for the last two weeks. The statement deliberately perpetrates the lie that Germany has only decided to bomb London as a result of the British first bombing Berlin.

Certainly never before in modern times have a great people been so misled, so unscrupulously lied to, as the Germans under this regime. The Borsen Zeitung even went so far last night as to tell its innocent readers that all military objectives in Germany were so well protected by antiaircraft guns that it was quite impossible for the British planes to bomb them. Therefore the British went after unprotected civilian houses. How many Germans will ask then, why, with an admitted concentration of guns in and around Berlin such as no other area in the world has ever seen—why has not a single plane yet been brought down?

Ohio Girl, 13, Wins Carnegie Valor Medal for Saving Baby

Pittsburgh, Oct. 31 (U.P.).—The heroism of a 13-year-old girl in fighting off an enraged sow that had attacked a 22-month-old baby was given recognition tonight by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission, which, at its fall meeting, awarded 24 bronze medals for deeds of valor.

After the sow, with a litter of pigs, attacked the baby, James R. Ferguson, at Salineville, Ohio, last June 12, Norma Anna Bedell, of Hammondsville, Ohio, tossed James to safety, then fought the sow with her hands until she obtained a pitchfork to drive the animal away. Norma and James recovered from their injuries.

Another dramatic deed won a medal for Louis A. Snetcamp, 53, Milwaukee, Wis., for saving Rudolph Miller, 45, from exposure. After Miller fell in the icy waters of White Lake while the two were duck hunting, Snetcamp worked for seven hours to keep Miller from freezing during the time their boat was marooned by ice. Men in a motor boat later rescued the two.

Seven Give Lives

Seven persons, four of them boys, gave their lives in performing the deeds that won them bronze medals. They were: John M. Dornhoefer, 76, Ridgewood, Queens, Long Island, N. Y.; Walter Jared H. Carter, 31, Mexico, Mo., and James Patrick Knight, sr., 35, Natchez, Miss. Gary J. Valentine, 24, Cannonsburg, Miss., was given a medal for his part in the heroic act that brought death to Knight.

Of the 24 honored by the commission, 14 were given bronze medals for rescuing or attempting to save persons from drowning. Those included: Damian Garcia, 15, Kansas City, Mo.; Hubert S. Beckwith, 19, Waterville, Me.; Charles Dean Logan, 18, Columbia Falls, Mont.; Stuart E. Mastin, 21, Buffalo, N. Y.; Emily Jean Cober, 16, Rochester, N. Y.; June E. Cady, 12, Lancaster, N. Vermont Man Honored

What Should Be Done About Defense Strikes?

John L. Lewis' defiance of President Roosevelt caused a flood of caustic criticism in Congress, whose members talk of legislation to regulate labor unions.

How far is public opinion in this country willing to go to prevent strikes in defense industries? Would a majority favor the extreme step of forbidding defense strikes by law?

Sunday's Post will bring you a Gallup Poll report on the timely question: "Should the government forbid strikes in defense industries, or should the workers in those industries continue to have the right to go on strike?"

Browne Ousted As Theatrical Union Chief

By International News Service

New York, Oct. 31.—The New York Daily Mirror in a copyrighted story tonight said that George E. Browne, codefendant with Willie Bioff in the $550,000 motion picture extortion trial, has been ousted from the presidency of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employes (A. F. L.).

The I. A. T. S. E. has elected Thomas Murtha, president of the New York State Association of Theatrical Stagehands, Employes and Motion Picture Operators, to succeed Browne as its president, according to the Daily Mirror.

Public announcement of the ouster of Browne by the I. A. T. S. E., the story said, was to have been withheld until the extortion trial of Browne and Willie Bioff, West Coast labor leader, was completed.

This is the second time within a month that the A. F. of L. has rebuked Browne. On October 15 at the Seattle convention, A. F. L. delegates ousted him from his office as a vice president of the A. F. L. by a vote of 37,944 to 421.

The I. T. A. S. E. ouster is seen as coming as a result of the disclosures made at the extortion trial. There Browne has been pictured by witnesses as a dictator who not only extorted money from motion-picture producers under threat of strike but also raided other unions to steal the membership.

$350 Payment To Wife Saves Man From Jail

A Mount Rainier (Md.) electrician managed to raise $350 in the nick of time yesterday afternoon to escape being jailed by an order of the United States Court of Appeals.

The order, unprecedented in that such punitive action is usually taken in the District Court, was issued early in the afternoon when the man, George A. Brown, was charged with failure to obey a previous decree that he must pay his estranged wife $500 maintenance within a period of 60 days.

His wife, Mrs. Mary Estelle Brown, asserted he had paid her only $150 of the amount, which was granted her on July 21. At that time the court ordered Brown to pay his wife's maintenance during divorce litigation that has been pending in the courts since 1938.

Brown was taken into custody by a deputy Marshal, but was held in District Court instead of being immediately taken to jail since there was a chance that he might be able to raise the money.

He succeeded, but did not explain how. He was released after turning it over to the marshal for delivery to the court.

The couple were married in 1905.

The Gallup Poll

Unions for Government Workers Opposed By Large Majority in Nation-wide Survey

This is the fourth of a series of reports by the Gallup Poll on public opinion and the labor problem.

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 31.—Although public opinion in the United States is in favor of labor unions among Government employes.

The public is more conservative in that respect than President Roosevelt who once said that Government workers could join unions if they wished, but could not go on strike. The majority of voters not only oppose strikes against the Government, but believe that Governmental workers should not be permitted to join unions.

Such is the evidence from a Nation-wide poll of public opinion just completed by the Institute. The results follow:

"Should Government employes be allowed to join labor unions?"

Yes	28%
No	64
No opinion	8

"Should people who work for the Government be allowed to go on strike?"

Yes	17%
No	79
No opinion	4

As compared to four years ago there has, however, been some decline in opposition to the idea of labor unions in Government. In an Institute poll on the same issue in August, 1937, more than 70 per cent were opposed.

Those voters who think there should be labor unions in Government argue that Government workers should have the same rights as any other kind of worker, and that with unionization they could bring about better working conditions and better wages.

The majority opposed to Government unions base their attitude on two main arguments. First, they believe that labor unions in the Government might grow so powerful that they would cripple or compromise the power of the Government to enforce laws.

Second, a large number point out that one of the big jobs of the Government is to mediate disputes between labor and capital, and that if its own employes are unionized, it cannot be impartial and objective in settling labor disputes throughout the country.

Whitewashing Stalin

Thousands of Americans who applaud the decision to give primacy to our aid to Russia will find present efforts to whitewash the Stalin regime a little nauseating. For the most part Americans are intelligent people. They can support a policy of aiding any army that is fighting the menace of Hitlerism without the pretense that what was black has suddenly become white. They can draw a distinction between the military strategy of sending airplanes, gasoline and tanks to Communist Russia and the acceptance of Stalinism as a kindred system to democracy.

The most flagrant effort to butter over Stalin's domestic policies that has come to our attention is the article by Joseph E. Davies, former United States Ambassador to Russia, appearing in the current issue of the American Magazine. In brief, Mr. Davies asks us to believe that Stalin's notorious purges were far-sighted measures to prepare for the coming struggle with Hitler. He now thinks the Soviet regime "unquestionably proved its case" against the high officials and generals who faced firing squads for alleged conspiracy with Trotsky and German and Japanese agents. Indeed, the article appears to have been written to applaud the foresight and wisdom of this "house cleaning." By a discriminate policy of slaughter Stalin is credited with strengthening Russia to withstand her present ordeal.

"But this 'all-out' program could easily have been nullified," writes the former Ambassador, "if Stalin and his associates had not cleaned out all treasonable elements within the country three years before the invasion was launched . . . There are no saboteurs, secret agents, or Fifth Columnists to cooperate with the invaders, because the Russians were sufficiently far-sighted to eliminate them before it was too late. That is a fact which other liberty-loving nations might well ponder."

It is appalling to learn that a former United States Ambassador sees a love for liberty in a regime which makes a policy of slaughtering opponents to its dictator. But that curious myopia is not exclusive with Mr. Davies. President Roosevelt's special messenger to Moscow, Mr. Harry Hopkins, quotes Stalin as saying that "Russia will not again be enslaved," and makes the quotation without the slightest evidence that he has his tongue in his cheek. By American standard the Russians are already as much enslaved as the German people under the Nazis. Attempts to sugar-coat this slavery, to whitewash Stalin's bloody purges, and to turn the destruction of religions in Russia into freedom of worship are an insult to the intelligence of the American people. Such flimsy pretense is particularly out of place at this time. For it tends to cast suspicion on a policy which should be confined to giving only military aid to the U. S. S. R.

Rhythms Of Wrecks

From January, 1939, until the end of August, 1940, the passenger airlines in this country were operated without the loss of a single life. Indeed there was not a single serious accident. Then came the great disaster at Lovettsville, Va., in which Senator Lundeen and 24 others were killed. Between November, 1940, and Feburary 28 of this year there were five airline crashes which resulted in 29 deaths. But for eight months thereafter not a single life was lost. This fine record was abruptly broken on Thursday, one of the darkest days in the whole history of commercial aviation. A Northwest Airlines plane crashed at Moorhead, Minn., killing 14. A few hours later a huge American Airlines transport bound for Detroit crashed in flames at St. Thomas, Ont., killing 20. This was the worst accident since the Lovettsville tragedy.

Thus there would seem to be a certain periodicity about these passenger plane accidents. Of course, meteorological conditions are an important factor. The risks naturally tend to be greater in those months in which unfavorable flying weather occurs most frequently. But the fact that there were no important accidents throughout the autumn and winter season of 1939-40 suggests that weather may not be the sole explanation of the matter. A House committee which has been investigating the Vero Beach (Fla.) crash of last April puts the blame on various psychological factors. They adduce "the overconfidence of pilots" and the "inferiority complex of dispatchers." While this may seem far-fetched, it contains an idea that is worth careful investigation. It seems logical enough that a series of serious accidents should give rise to more than ordinary caution and precaution. Equally logical is it that such care would tend to be relaxed after a long interval without accidents.

Reuben James

Lord Salisbury once observed that the commonest error of statesmanship is to cling to the carcasses of dead policies. How dead is the policy underlying the Neutrality Act is demonstrated by the sinking of the U. S. S. Reuben James. The Reuben James was on no neutrality patrol. It was engaged in helping to clear the Atlantic of the pirates who are seeking to add to Hitler's empire an ocean upon which our country depends for its national security and who would isolate our country in a friendless world. The orders were given by the President acting as Commander in Chief. But in this case the President acted in complete deference to the demands of a people who had long before asserted their alarm over the anarchy in the Atlantic and over our exposure to the Hitler menace. Then the need to make our defense positive was underlined by the ruthless warfare which Hitler has been waging on our merchant shipping. Neutrality in such circumstances is a carcass, and the sinking of the Reuben James should spur the legislators to bury the lifeless body of the Neutrality Act with a resounding vote.

The name of the sunken vessel is a reminder of the analogy which the President drew when he gave his shooting orders to the Navy. Reuben James was the name of an American enlisted man in our undeclared war against the Tripolitan pirates. A tradition clings to his name arising out of a brave deed. James took on his own head an ax blow aimed at the head of Admiral Decatur by a Tripolitan pirate. The boat bearing James' name was engaged in precisely the same kind of operations which nearly cost James his life. The Mediterranean had become almost a closed sea as a result of the depredations of the pirates of the Barbary coast. Hitler's plan is to bring the Atlantic within his closed system, and if Hitler won this war, we should find our commerce subjected to his laws. If we did not pay him tribute for the privilege of using the Atlantic, our boats would suffer the same fate as the American freighter Lehigh. This was not sunk even in an arbitrarily named German war zone, but off the coast of Africa, and while traveling empty to the Gold Coast to pick up a cargo of palm oil and manganese. Mr. Roosevelt merely followed the example of Mr. Jefferson in combating this kind of piracy by the invocation of his powers as Commander in Chief. Mr. Lindbergh and other oppositionists persist in saying that Mr. Roosevelt in so doing has exceeded his constitutional powers. But the Federal convention expressly modified Congress' power "to make war" in the original draft of the Constitution to a power "to declare war" in order to meet precisely such emergencies.

Senate oppositionists continue to talk as if the United States, by facing what William James called "the irreducible and stubborn facts," would be getting into war. As if we had any freedom left to say whether we are in or out of this world war! Hitler has settled the problem which vexes the oppositionists. Long ago he put the United States into this war. He knows that while the United States stands as a free society his mad dream of a Nazi world is impossible of realization. He counts upon bringing down one country after another till he has faced us with an overwhelming force. This brooding challenge we have accepted on the specific issue that the freedom at least of the Atlantic is the cardinal doctrine of our foreign policy. We shall succeed in controlling our own destiny in this interdependent world only if we stand as one man against the evil force which is the enemy of America as of all mankind.

Army At Bendix

President Roosevelt was forced to take over the Air Associates plant at Bendix, N. J., by a breakdown in the production of warplane parts under private operation. Disorder broke out when the company went through the motions of complying with the recommendation of the National Defense Mediation Board that 75 strikers be reinstated. Apparently the company permitted day-shift workers to remain in the plant after quitting time to intimidate and beat up the returning strikers. No protection was given the strikers, and production was interrupted by a demonstration walkout on their return. Seizure of the plant was the only alternative to continued chaos in a factory on which the Government is relying for vital airplane parts.

The record of the company in dealing with the Mediation Board certainly did not encourage a lenient policy. As previously noted by The Post, the company insisted that the status of the union be redetermined, though it had won an NLRB-supervised election in July. Representatives of the company walked out on the NDMB and later refused to accept its recommendations that the strikers be promptly returned to their jobs. Such arbitrary conduct in a national crisis is an invitation for the Army to step in. In the circumstances the President was well advised to act promptly and thus avoid further interruption of airplane manufacturing schedules.

One effect of this plant seizure, however, is to emphasize the great disparity between the treatment accorded obstructionist employers on the one hand and obstructionist labor leaders on the other. Recalcitrant employers know precisely what to expect. If they fail to produce war supplies because of arbitrary treatment of labor, they will find the Army at their gates. But no such stern measures face labor leaders who threaten to sabotage our rearmament efforts. Even in the Bendix case C. I. O. leaders threatened to call sympathy strikes by 250,000 men in the aircraft industry to force compliance with the NDMB's recommendations. The United States does not need strikes to enforce its own laws and regulations. What it most urgently needs is production and more production of war materials without stoppages for any cause. Our defense program will not attain a secure footing until Congress and the Administration make plain to unions that the choice of violence and delay where peaceful means of settling disputes exist will no longer be tolerated.

Ups And Downs

The gulf between our actual production and our productive capacity—a margin which used to concern our social reformers in the early New Deal days—seems now to have been bridged under the spur of defense work. This is the conclusion of Alfred P. Sloan, jr., chairman of General Motors. From now on, he says, any further increase in our national income, which is the sum in dollars of our output of goods, will represent advances in prices rather than additions to the physical volume of production. To date, as he says, the reverse has been true. We have had a tremendous expansion of physical output, but only a small part of the increase has been due to the rising price level. The new factor of price rises will make for difficulty in interpreting our current business data. Obviously we cannot say that our prosperity is rising with our national income when an increase in prices accounts for it.

With production at or close to maximum, any subsequent increases in one field of production, moreover, can be achieved only by corresponding declines in other productive lines. As a matter of fact, business indices in general use already reflect shifts in production occasioned by the emergency. In September, for example, the index of factory sales of automobiles was only 76 (1935-39 equals 100), and silk deliveries, 34. The index for aircraft production, however, reached 1238; machinery output, 225; electric steel production, 405. These extreme variations from the average in the output of particular types of goods are going to become even more pronounced in the months ahead. Indices relating to transportation and distribution of goods are also beginning to behave erratically as a result of the defense program. Thus, while retail trade rose 19 per cent during the first nine months of the year, in significantly close correspondence with the 17 per cent advance in national income, a contraseasonal decline occurred in the month of September. That recession was due in part, no doubt, to previous buying in anticipation of new taxes and partly to buying in anticipation of priority shortages. In a thoroughly disordered world business indices, like all other calculations based on the assumed existence of a normal pattern of life, lose their customary validity, and have to be reinterpreted in the light of strange happenings.

Back On The Air

Back to the air, now that the ASCAP's long trouble with the networks has been settled, will come more than a million mike-frightened tunes. Just why radio listeners did not raise the stew ASCAP expected when Victor Herbert, George Gershwin and others left the air can only be guessed. Of course, when the tunes were first withdrawn it was reasonable to expect that their ban would not be permanent. And it is possible that the American public rather welcomed the "something old" and "something new" which program directors supplied to fill in the gaps. A group of college students did burn in effigy "Jeanie With the Light Brown Hair," but otherwise Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public listened to the old stuff with hardly a murmur. A fashion in tones and rhythm, known as "boogie woogie," also got in some hot licks by the fireside, and flaming youth hummed and whistled its measures with as much fervor, if with less melody, than they formerly employed upon the ballads. Actually radio musicians have presented a pleasant ten months' session of variety to their fans, though we fancy that the ASCAP airs will prove refreshing after their long absence.

MORNING

A robin soberly patrols the grass
Through the long shadows; placid rabbits pass
Across the road; a spider web is spun,
A silver cartwheel, on the pump; the sun
Transmutes each tiny needle hung with dew
Upon a pine to opal, flame, and blue;
A weary moth, a loiterer of the night,
Goes fluttering home bewildered by the light.

Moral Leadership

Please accept my humble gratitude for your editorial in Sunday's Post, "Seed of the Church." You touched the heart of America in your last paragraph. That is America's hope, there is the deep conviction and the good common sense of the American people. Of course, we can't make deals with Hitler or the military in Japan, but we can reach the masses in both countries, but only through Christ and His methods. Is there no one that will lead His fight. That method has not been tried and we know it.

Why do hundreds of thousands read and talk about "Keys to the Kingdom?" I can tell you from actual experience that it has been many a year since a book has made such an impression on the American people. What has happened in our churches? Are not the leaders of the faiths slumbering in smug complacency? Where is the fire of passion, the bloody heads, the unselfishness among our ministers, priests and rabbis? Do they really believe? Do they really care?

The people of this country in their heart of hearts are burning for a crusade—a revival, a chance to participate in the greatest moral spiritual movement that the world has ever known. They wait for leadership, leadership of the highest moral type and not of the church—some man of the Niemoeller type that will go all the way without flinching—who will accept nothing and give everything—who will stand apart from Government and have none of it. He is the man we need.

Outlaw Strikes

As the Washington Post's editorial states, John L. Lewis is playing politics in the coal mine strike, and we agree with you that the Nation will back the President in his demand that production of all essential industries be continued without interruption by strikes or lockouts.

Had Mr. Lewis continued to keep the mines closed, we hoped that the President would appeal to the miners to return to work in disregard of the mine union officials and would promise them fair arbitration of any just grievance.

If that appeal had failed, then Congress, without further delay, should have passed a law outlawing strikes for the duration.

HOWARD D. WOODSON.

Lack Of Unity

To my way of thinking, all this talk about the lack of unity for National defense is a bunch of tommy-rot. I doubt whether in all the Nation's history has there been a time when the people have been more united and determined to defend their country against foreign aggression than they are today.

Everywhere I come in contact with people, all I hear is full accord for a powerful Army and Navy, combined with individual expressions of willingness to give their all for actual defense of the Nation.

The only lack of unity I hear anything about is relative to the matter of using our boys to fight the battles of other nations, as well as the matter of giving away our badly needed defense materials to other nations to carry on their wars for commercial supremacy.

The Coal Strike

Your editorial of October 27 on the strike of the U. M. W. in the captive coal mines fails to present an adequate background for an examination of the issues.

Many people believe that the strike is unimportant to labor, since immediate pay raises are not being pushed. This attitude is narrow and ill-informed. Coal mining over the long haul is a decadent industry. The U. M. W. is concerned with strengthening its position, so that after the war boom has passed on it may be in a position to protect its members insofar as possible from excessive misery until new avenues of employment can be opened to them. All devices which strengthen the union while production is at its peak will better enable it to deal with the inevitable collapse when it comes.

Like Mr. Roosevelt you direct your appeal in the coal strike solely to the miners, not to the huge steel combines and to Mr. Morgan behind them. Perhaps you neglect to appeal to them since you recognize the fact that they have no uncommercial patriotism to appeal to. Or can it be that you want the full blame for the dislocation to fall on labor? Let it be noted that there is ample coal available for all steel production for at least three more weeks, and if the strike is settled within that time any charges that it held up defense production will be plain libel.

The personality of Mr. John L. Lewis is not the question. I am as much opposed to his foreign policy and his general shortsightedness as you are. As a C. I. O. member I am probably far more aware of the disastrous effects his vanity and prejudice may have on the labor movement. He may well make utterances absurd and embittering, and these may have the regrettable effect of intensifying the difficulties. But the strike is not the creation of John Lewis. It is one of the many distressing incidents of the failings of our centralized capitalism, and of a businessman's defense program. The strike was called not by John Lewis alone, but by the great organization he represents on the basis of considerations some of which I have outlined above.

Irish Isolationists

One wonders of what the members of the America First Committee who are of Irish ancestry are thinking that they can be satisfied to exert themselves for the cause of isolation—a soft word for appeasement.

The trouble seems to be that they are thinking of the past, rather than of the future. The future is very important. We can mold it very considerably by our present actions, but nothing can change the past.

If the isolationist sentiment could control this country and no help whatsoever be given to Britain and Russia, it might well mean the success of Hitlerism . . . a deadly thing for any liberty of thought and religion. Surely, this would not be desired by those who hold Eire so dear.

It would be well for these "isolation" Irish-Americans to heed the following words of the Irish Senator MacDermot, spoken while on his recent visit to the United States: " . . . When thinking of Ireland, they (Irish-Americans) should be more interested in the present and future than in the past, and so far as they do think of the past, they should remember that to understand is often to forgive . . . that if they play Hitler's game by obstructing either America's defense or American aid to Britain, they are, however unconsciously hurting the interests of the people actually living in Ireland."

The Old Prospector Is Answered

I wish to criticize the statements of Mr. Gimlett in The Post concerning the great American women. Because our noble country has deemed it wise to give its women a prominent place in this world, and because the women have taken their chances and developed themselves into beings of higher educational value than some of our would be prominent men, I feel it out of place, unwise, and demoralizing, to classify them as he has.

It is too bad that he lives so far remote of ever changing times, times that change as the seconds fly, that give variety to an otherwise monotonous world. I don't know whether he thinks he has made any deep impression on these women or not. Personally I doubt it. They most likely were too busy creating or studying to give him or his letter a thought.

You don't get around women these days by telling them how unimportant they are or should be. You'll find that out when you get older, and a good thing too, for the women are important in this world now, but would be an impediment and an unfortunate monstrosity. Would that be the way he would have them?

So he doesn't like lip-stick, and nail polish, and other cosmetics. It's quite a going business, and sends quite a sum of money into channels that build ships, guns, airplanes, etc. These things in this particular day and age are quite necessary if we intend to protect ourselves, and expect to have anybody to fight for us after the first battle. God bless the American women anyway. They're the best-looking women on earth, and if they want to make themselves more beautiful, more power to them. Some men think women wear make-up to please the male order. Don't kid yourself, they do it out of self-respect, and if there is anything a woman should be commended for, it's neatness.

What do you want women to do, raise babies just to go to war to be shot? You don't know the women if you think they'll do that. An American woman would rather do the fighting herself, right now, right this moment, than send that precious little baby that God gave to her and that she once held in her arms and close to her heart.

No these women aren't meant to be slaves, and they never will be. Mr. Gimlett better think it over, and take a better view on the subject. I think he's barking up the wrong tree.

JOHN F. SULLIVAN, D. S. C.
Mankato, Minn. Oct. 26.

I have a few comments to make on a woman's opinion of being judged by the hermit of Arbor Villa, Colo., standards.

I believe the woman of today is as patriotic as long ago. Man and woman have changed. We advance with the years of progress, in every way.

Concerning the word obey in marriage vows, I believe this word still is observed in most homes.

My responsibility is to be father also and entire supporter of my children. My girls' father has failed them, while they are too small to help themselves.

There happen to be so many broken homes. If I had had most of my experience in housework and family sewing, could I support a family?

Death Mask

Two diminutive men of destiny are much in the news these days—the Little Fuehrer and, by way of comparison, the Little Corporal in whose footsteps the former seems to be goosestepping across the steppes of Russia by way, let it be hoped, of prelude to meeting his own particular Waterloo. History will acknowledge that Adolf Hitler and Napoleon Bonaparte had in common a Russian campaign—a "drive to the east" complex—that, and, varying in kind, each his personal dictatorship. This much the people of New Orleans acknowledge, I discovered when I was in that city of destiny a few weeks ago—this much and no more, for New Orleanians despise Hitler while, quite unashamedly, they venerate the memory of Napoleon.

When, for the first time, I approached the Cabildo, the old Spanish statehouse on picturesque Jackson Square and one of several historic edifices in the vicinity in which the treasures of the Louisana State Museum are on view, I was greeted by a woman who was selling Evangeline dolls of her own "invention" and manufacture. With typical Deep Southern graciousness, she inquired if I was a stranger in the city. When I replied affirmatively, she urged me to be sure not to miss seeing the death mask of Napoleon on the second floor of the Cabildo.

Since I had just finished reading the morning paper with its headlines proclaiming Hitler's progress in his Russian campaign, his disregard of American rights on the high seas and the rest of it, the moment seemed overripe for me to behold the death mask of a dictator. I hurried up the rickety wooden staircase and was not disappointed; for the first object that caught my eye when I reached the second floor was a plate-glass case mounted on a base of gold-decorated ebony and, in that case, on a strip of imperial red damask, reposed a bronze cast of the pillowed head of Napoleon—yet of a Napoleon different, somehow, from the man I had seen pictured in so many poses, all of them arrogant, unmisingly struck by the Little Corporal during his lifetime. I was, first of all, in beholding this mask, made aware of a ghost of a smile, Mona-Lisa-like in its inscrutability, on the slightly parted lips. At what, I wondered, had the exiled Emperor been smiling or started to smile—at destiny—himself—death? It did not matter. The ghost of a smile was there—immortalized, death-frozen on the stern face of a defunct dictator. I stood very still, trying to discern some slight resemblance of the dead to either of two living dictators—but there was none—only a very slight resemblance to another long dead dictator—Julius Caesar.

"Did you see it?" the Doll Lady asked eagerly as I emerged from the Cabildo several hours later. Then, without waiting for an answer, she sighed—"Isn't it wonderful? And to think he—Napoleon Bonaparte—was almost one of us. But you know all that, of course."

I did know of his having engineered the Louisiana Purchase, but little else of his connection with New Orleans, and confessed to my ignorance.

"It's a wonderful story!" the Dolly Lady exclaimed. "But the fitting and proper place for you to hear it told is in the Napoleon House on the corner of Chartres Street and St. Louis here in the Quarter.

Over an excellent "aperitivo," Mr. George began—"So you have come to hear about our Emperor, my friend here tells me. You know, of course, this is the house." His dark-skinned hand gestured eloquently toward the ancient edifice through the ground floor of which we had just passed. "Nicholas Girod, a wealthy merchant here, had it built," Mr. George continued. "Girod was also the Mayor of New Orleans. He superintended, too, the outfitting of a clipper ship, the Seraphine. Many say that M. Girod acted on the advice of the Baron Joseph Xavier Delfau de Pontalba, father-in-law of the Baroness Micaela who erected the country's first apartments on Jackson Square, a very great lady, indeed.

"Napoleon, of course," the Doll Lady put in excitedly, "knew of the plan to rescue him from St. Helena and bring him here to live in this house as befitted such a—an Emperor. Everything would have been perfect—Dominique You, brother of our patriot-pirate, Lafitte, who was responsible for saving New Orleans in the War of 1812, and Bossiere, one of his confreres, had been engaged to man the Seraphine. They were about to leave for St. Helena when word came that Napoleon had died."

"But," Mr. George added brightly as the Doll Lady's voice trailed off on a regretful sigh and her blue eyes brimmed with tears, "we have here in New Orleans the next best thing to having had Napoleon himself in the flesh. We have his death mask in the Cabildo as you have seen, of course. It was cast from the original matrix made just 42 hours after the Emperor's sad demise, by his personal physician, Dr. Antommarchi, from clay obtained hurriedly on a small island close to St. Helena. It was the good doctor who had the cast made from the matrix and, when he had come to reside here, presented it to the City of New Orleans, the government of Louis Phillipe having refused it and it having been refused to an English collector. Even the Hotel des Invalides in Paris, Napoleon's last resting place, has but a plaster cast of the mask—not one, as befits the features of an immortal, cast in eternal bronze."

"But," the Doll Lady sighed, "if we could only have had him in life—living right here in the house that was prepared for him!"

"Still," I ventured, "there are dictators today and—and surely the people of New Orleans would not——"

"Napoleon Bonaparte," she flashed at me, "was not a dictator, Napoleon Bonaparte was an Emperor."

"And you may rest assured," the Doll Lady added emphatically, "the curators at the Cabildo would not accept for display a death mask with a Charley Chaplin mustache or one with a jaw like a rhinoceros has got! After all, the people of New Orleans have always had a tremendous sense of the fitness of things!"

Lindbergh As Prophet

SPEAKING in New York on Thursday evening Col. Lindbergh appealed to his own record on the war, arguing that what has happened in Europe is due to the fact that his advice was disregarded. If this is true, if Col. Lindbergh is in fact the far-seeing, expert observer and political prophet who was disregarded, then his views on the present situation do indeed have very great weight.

LIPPMANN

Here, in his own words, is his version of what happened:

"By 1938 I had come to the conclusion that if a war occurred between Germany on one side, and England and France on the other, it would result either in a German victory or in a prostrate and devastated Europe. I therefore advocated that England and France build their military forces with the utmost rapidity, but that they permit Germany to expand eastward into Russia without declaring war.

"As you know the opposite school of thought prevailed."

Col. Lindbergh's memory has failed him. The views he held in 1938 were not disregarded. They were followed by the Chamberlain government in Britain and by M. Georges Bonnet, the Foreign Minister of France. The advice which Col. Lindbergh gave the British and French governments was not disregarded. "The opposite school of thought" did not prevail. Col. Lindbergh's school of thought prevailed, and as a result Chamberlain and Daladier went to Munich in September, 1938, and signed the Munich pact.

AT MUNICH, Messrs. Chamberlain and Daladier did exactly what Col. Lindbergh says they should have done. They excluded Russia from the Munich conference. They compelled Czecho-Slovakia to surrender its defenses, which were the strongest in eastern Europe, then, having isolated Russia, they did exactly what Col. Lindbergh thinks they should have done: They declared to Hitler and served notice on Stalin that "they would permit Germany to expand eastward into Russia without declaring war."

If Col. Lindbergh had judged Hitler and the European situation correctly, the Munich pact should have meant that Hitler would, thereafter, have improved his relations with Britain and France while he prepared "to expand eastward into Russia." But in fact Hitler did not do what Col. Lindbergh's prophecy required Hitler to do. Within a fortnight of Munich, Hitler delivered a violent speech against Britain, going so far as to name the British public men who, in his opinion, should not be allowed to hold office. He began to make demands, not on Russia, but on Britain and France for a redistribution of their African empires, and his agents were at work fomenting insurrection in the Middle East.

IN OTHER WORDS the effect of Munich was the exact opposite of what Mr. Chamberlain, and incidentally Col. Lindbergh, planned and expected. Hitler did not turn against Russia. On the contrary, having separated Russia from Britain and France, he could ignore Russia for the time being, could even prepare a temporary agreement with Russia, while he devoted his attention, first, to separating the French army from the Polish, and then to separating Britain from France. Thus, though it is a debatable question whether Britain, France, Czecho-Slovakia, and Russia could or should have resisted Hitler before Munich, it is absolutely certain that Col. Lindbergh's theory that peace could be bought by inciting a German-Russian war was disastrously wrong. Permitting, in fact inviting, Hitler to make war on Russia did not produce the war against Russia which, in Col. Lindbergh's view, it should have meant.

What it did was to make Russia an undeclared enemy of Britain and France, and in the critical period from 1939 to 1941, something very near to an ally of Hitler. Col. Lindbergh's idea, which was also that of the British and French appeasers, was that Britain and France could buy safety and time to arm by inviting Hitler to attack Russia. This idea, as dishonorable as it was foolish, was the boomerang which made it safe for Hitler to go to war, knowing that he need not fear the hostility of Stalin or bother about the Russian army until he had disposed of the French army.

COL. LINDBERGH cannot present himself as the prophet who was not listened to. The historical record refutes his present image of himself as the disregarded prophet. He was listened to, and the policy he advocated was followed: Mr. Chamberlain tried to do exactly what Col. Lindbergh says he should have done. He tried to push Hitler eastward against Russia while Britain armed and while Britain hoped that Hitler would become too exhausted in Russia to attack Britain. What Col. Lindbergh did not foresee, what even with hindsight he does not yet see, is that once Britain and France had been separated from Russia, it was as much Stalin's interest as Hitler's to have Germany "expand" first towards the west rather than towards the east.

Thus the "conclusion" Col. Lindbergh had come to in 1938 was, as the event has shown, a complete miscalculation both as regards Hitler and Stalin. And the tragedy of Europe is not that Col. Lindbergh's conclusions were disregarded but that they were accepted by the ruling classes of Britain and France.

IT IS Col. Lindbergh who has learned nothing from experience, not even from the events in which he himself played a not inconsiderable part. Thinking that his advice to abandon Russia in 1938 and invite Hitler to attack Russia was disregarded, when in fact it was adopted at Munich, he still thinks that the way to preserve the peace is to invite Hitler to destroy all his opponents one by one. That is Col. Lindbergh's advice to us today. He wants to go on doing what Mr. Chamberlain, fortified by his own advice, did in 1938—to deliver to Hitler one by one the nations capable of resisting him.

Thus, having been in favor of a Nazi attack on Russia in 1938 as a means of preserving "peace," he would now abandon Russia to Hitler, and he would now abandon Britain to Hitler, and he would now abandon China to Hitler's ally —all for the sake of peace and in the name of peace.

If he can now succeed in doing in the United States what in 1938 he did in Britain and France, he will once more separate Russia from Britain, and then he will separate Britain from America. The practical consequence now would again be what it was after 1938—not to preserve the peace but to make certain that Hitler did not have to fight more than one great power at a time.

AND SO when he says that "after two years of war we are in a better position to judge the policies that were followed by England and France," he is quite right. But he might add that we are also in a better position to judge the policy advocated by Col. Lindbergh since 1938.

Workers Party Defendants Plotted Revolt, AFL Agent Says

Minneapolis, Oct. 31 (AP).—James Bartlett, business agent of General Drivers Union 544, A. F. L. and a key Government witness in the trial of 28 persons on charges of seditious conspiracy, testified today that he and six other persons now defendants discussed armed overthrow of the Government in January of 1938.

Bartlett named V. R. Dunne, Oscar Coover, Carl Skoglung, Carlos Hudson, Karl Kuehn and Max Gelman as persons attending a meeting there at which it was decided the Socialists would never achieve their goal by peaceful means, and that the Socialist Workers Party was correct in believing armed overthrow only would succeed.

Under questioning of United States District Attorney Victor Anderson, Bartlett was discussing views of the S. W. P. when Albert Goldman, defense attorney and a defendant, leaped to his feet and said "Just a minute now—I don't know as you are an expert on Marxism."

"I don't know either," said Judge M. M. Joyce. "Let's find out."

When Bartlett was asked what was meant by a "dictatorship of the proletariat," which he had mentioned as the goal of the S. W. P., Bartlett said it would be rule by the working classes after overthrow of the capitalistic government.

Presidential Visits

LATIN-AMERICAN dignitaries visiting in ever-increasing number the United States and Washington and who have an opportunity to call on President Roosevelt leave the White House as in a trance!

Comments after a visit to the President by Senator Concha, chairman of the foreign relations committee of the Chilean Senate, reflect with remarkable uniformity the opinion of Mr. Roosevelt by other visitors from South America.

We quote Senator Concha at his request: "The President spoke to us in English and until then I thought I could not understand that language. Before his words were translated to me I knew exactly what he had said. His inflection of voice, his eyes, his gestures and his facial expressions in general told the story! What a tremendous personality the man has! His vitality must be inexhaustible, receiving us as if we had been the first callers in weeks, which is the impression he conveys convincingly.

"I have seen already many impressive things in the United States during my visit. All of them convey to me the power and strength of this Nation. But my visit with the leader of the country has been the most stimulating one. 'Que hombre'!—What a man!"

THERE IS no place in the Americas that is more in need of a good chamber of commerce and publicity agent than the town of Monte Cristi, in Ecuador.

The place is consistently ignored in spite of the fact that the best "Panama" hats come from there. In the United States and in Europe that headgear is called Panama hat although not a single one is made in Panama, but used to be shipped to other countries through that port. In South America the very popular and expensive hat is called by the tongue-twisting name of "Jipi-Japa," again a slight to Monte Cristi since according to the inhabitants of this town the population of Jipi-Japa in Ecuador knows as much about making those hats as they do about making electric engines.

Every one of the people of the town of Monte Cristi are busy making hats for the universal trade, but there is no hustling going on. The place is quiet and sleepy. Everything is made by hand under the shade of abundant palm trees. The patriarchs of the town are those old-timers who have become adept in the making of the very fine hats and which might be sold in the States for as much as $1500 or even $2000 apiece. The weaving of the real works of art takes place under water, beginning in the middle of the crown. The straws are interlaced by incredibly sensitive fingers to a consistency of little less than silk. Weight and flexibility tell the quality of the hat and its value on the market.

In spite of the reputation and popularity of the Panama hat throughout the world, no efficiency expert has ever shown up in Monte Cristi to disturb the calm of the Monte Cristians, who will send a number of "salesmen" or "feelers" to the ships that touch Manta, the nearest port. These contact men bring back the news to town as to how the "gringoes" —the British—would like their hats this year and what the "Norte Americano" thinks the fashion will be. In Manta one may buy a Monte Cristi hat for as little as $10 that would retail in the United States for $100.

THE UNIVERSITY of Chile, located right in the heart of the City of Santiago, is not only the most important educational institution of the nation but also the alma mater of many prominent South Americans. Today over 15 per cent of the student body is composed of foreigners from all over Latin America and, during the summer months, a good many from the United States.

One may rightly say that that old building occupying a whole block of the Alameda de las Delicias, the broadest avenue in Santiago, is the Mecca of Latin-American students of higher education. There has been no effort by the government to attract students from sister countries of South America. The reputation of the university is an old one and its foreign alumni has been increasing slowly during many years of existence.

Not unlike the Johns Hopkins University of Maryland, the buildings housing the different branches of studies of the Universidad de Chile can be found in different sections of the capital of Chile. The main building is an old, rambling structure without any particular distinction and looking slightly the worse for wear among the modern buildings, newcomers that are changing the colonial appearance of Santiago.

The battered, heavy doors are symbolic of the tumultuous history of the university. The students, much like the French, have always been and still are ardent followers of politics. Many a time those doors have been closed by the students as a gesture of protest against their conception of misgovernment, corruption or simply as a gesture of protest against the activities of some teacher. Then again the government, very much aware of the power of the student body, has occupied the building with police and surrounded the main building until disturbers calmed down. Politics among students is called "cosa seria"—something serious.

Cemeteries Shift Planned

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 31.—A plan has been approved by which all remains in the numerous cemeteries within the A. P. Hill Military Reservation in Caroline County will be moved shortly to new resting places. Bids will be asked within the next few weeks for the work of removing the bodies.

Little Hitler Of The Tropics

By Joseph Driscoll

Steps Toward Dictatorship In Panama

OVER the green mountains and the greener jungles of Panama, big black hungry-looking vultures wheel and soar tirelessly and endlessly, hour after hour, all day long. These birds of prey toil not, neither do they tailspin; there is something about the Tropics that feeds them and rewards their ominous vigil.

A vulture outlined in full flight against the red afternoon sun can be a thing of beauty, comparable, perhaps, to the sea gull, the tern, the frigate and the gooney-bird. Over sultry Panama the vultures fly in formations of scores and even hundreds, darkening the sky wherever they swoop in quest of carrion. Every now and then their close formations are invaded by old silvery birds with whistling, whirling claws. These are the fighters and scouts and bombing planes from Albrook Field, France Field, Coco Solo and the other United States military and naval air bases in the Canal Zone. As our planes approach, the black vultures hold their positions until the last minute. Suddenly they turn and flee in panic with loud squawks of rage and frustration. Our aluminum warbirds are too much for them.

The American eagle, pictured on United States coins, is a specie of vulture, so they say. But the black vulture seen over Panama, studied against the revealing sun, resembles the old Prussian eagle that Adolf Hitler took over. Maybe there is something symbolic there.

Our American planes, in cooperation with our troops and our warships, are guarding the Panama Canal, and guarding it well. These guardians of the most strategic canal in the world dread the Prussian vulture more than the Japanese beetle or the Italian tomato bug. For the Japanese can be handled far out in the Pacific, and the Italian will never get far out into the Atlantic.

The German vulture (for "vulture" read Axis propagandist, spy, saboteur) is spreading his wings over Central and South America not sufficient to fight a war, perhaps, but sufficient to stir up strife, insurrection and sabotage right up to the very gates and locks of the vital canal.

IN PANAMA alone there are 1000 Germans, 600 Italians and 300 Japanese. To lump all these together as vultures and trouble-makers would be manifestly unfair. Many are honest, hard-working farmers and business and professional men who have been in Panama for generations and expect to die there. But even these are being flooded with Axis propaganda and demands for contributions and active support by the younger Axis zealots who have moved in on Panama since Hitler's rise to power.

In the struggle for power in Panama between the rival camps of the democracies and the dictatorships, the Axis men won the first round when Arnulfo Arias, soon after his election to the Presidency in October, 1940, tore off his mask of friendship for the United States and revealed himself as a Hitler lover who was convinced of ultimate Nazi world conquest and wanted to cut himself in on the spoils as gauleiter of all Central America. Hitler now has one Minister for the whole of Central America, Otto Reinebeck, who has headquarters at Guatemala City, so Arias had a precedent to go by in scheming to rule over a postwar federation of the Central American states, with his headquarters as gauleiter in Panama City.

The second round of the struggle for power went to the United States when Arias was deposed as President by a pro-American group in his cabinet, which elected Ricardo Adolfo de la Guardia, a true friend of Uncle Sam, as President.

Now the third round is in progress and the final score is in doubt. President la Guardia has exiled Arias and jailed some of his intimates, but the Axis agents have not ceased their nefarious activities. They have merely been driven underground and out of the Presidencia, Panama's "White House."

There is an object lesson for the 21 American republics in the manner in which one of the smallest of their number was changed, step by step, from a pro-American government into a pro-Hitler regime. What happened to little Panama, a test tube for dictatorship, could conceivably happen to a larger republic. The change was accomplished gradually and piecemeal so as not to alarm the public. The thing was done by a man who pretended to be a democrat and who insisted right up to his departure into exile that he had the good of the people at heart and was an unselfish humanitarian whose only fault was that he was too impulsive and impatient.

The steps that took a free republic from democracy to dictatorship included the muzzling of the press, widespread use of the radio for propaganda purposes, interference in private business and creation of government monopolies, extension of the Presidential term of office, organization of a rubber-stamp Congress, graft and nepotism, militarization of the federal police force, and semimilitary training of children.

1. TERM OF OFFICE. Four years in office had been long enough for all of the predecessors of President Arnulfo Arias. Some of them had not served out their full four-year terms but had retired earlier because of disabilities or popular disapproval as reflected in the press or coup d'etats. Eighteen days after entering the Presidencia Dr. Arias had his term extended, more or less legally, to six years, and he boasted he would be president for life. He had been elected easily, almost by default, when his chief opponent, Dr. Alfaro, a scholarly statesman who had been Minister to Washington, declined to campaign when he saw the opposition had the cards stacked against him. Also, Dr. Alfaro refused to follow the quaint Panamanian custom of bribing the voters with $2 bills and pints of whisky on election day.

2. RUBBER-STAMP CONGRESS. Arias swept into office on the coattails of his personal popularity—he was a charming fellow when he wished to turn on the charm—a meek, subservient Congress that acknowledged him as master, rubber-stamped his various legislative ideas, and gave him a brand-new dictator-model constitution (even Soviet Russia has a constitution nowadays!) to replace the old constitution which had been satisfactory to Panama since she won independence from Colombia in 1903. Unlike Arias, this rubber-stamp Congress has not been exiled, and its future existence is one of the serious problems with which the new government will have to deal.

3. GAGGING THE PRESS. Until Arias became President and dictator, newspaper men were privileged to enter any public office and seek information for their readers. Arias stopped that. Inspired by Dr. Joseph Goebbel's Ministry of Propaganda and Culture, Arias established what he called the Department of Press, Radio and Public Spectacles. The announced purpose of this was to centralize and channelize news. The actual effect was to bar reporters from public offices, cutting off news at its sources, and to route them to a bureau, where they were to be given handouts on whatever scant news and publicity puffs the bureaucrats cared to release. This Arias no-news bureau is being abolished by the LaGuardia government, a spokesman for which explained: "In democratic countries newspaper men can ask the opinion of all public officials and also have access to all public offices."

4. RADIO PROPAGANDA. The Arias dictatorship preferred the radio over the press because radio broadcasting can be more easily controlled than individual newspapers. In Panama, for instance, radio was under the thumbs of the government, whereas the newspapers published by former President Harmodio Arias, elder brother of the disgraced Arnulfo Arias. The latter, incidentally, allowed full scope for the Nazi-Fascist propaganda of Julio Argain, whose Spanish "news" program was broadcast twice daily from the Miramar station. Argain, a Chilean, was arrested after the coup d'etat and ordered to leave Panama.

Dictators cannot suffer the truth to be told in the press. Edward Scott, New Zealand-born managing editor of the Panama-American, accused President Arnulfo Arias of sympathies for the Axis countries. Result: Scott was arrested in his office by an armed member of the secret service and held for deportation. Now that Arias himself has been deported, Scott may return to Panama.

5. GOVERNMENT MONOPOLIES AND INTERFERENCE IN PRIVATE BUSINESS. Not satisfied with the way private business conducted its affairs, President Arias established virtual government monopolies in sugar, rice, potatoes and beef cattle. However, the government was less efficient than private dealers. The cost of these staple commodities skyrocketed and some of them were so scarce as to be unobtainable at any price.

General resentment against the steep jumps in the cost of living explains why not one person in Panama raised a hand to rescue Dictator Arias from jail and exile. Arias showed no mercy to those who resisted his monopolies. When local sugar interests protested they could not sell Panama sugar to his monopoly at the price he fixed, Arias purchased his sugar from Cuba, regardless of the harm done to local industry. The LaGuardia government has decided that Banco Agro-Pecuario e Industrial, through which Arias operated his monopolies and interfered in private business, must liquidate its stocks of sugar, rice, coffee, potatoes, beef cattle, etc., and limit its activity to its original purpose—loan operations to foster agricultural and industrial development of Panama.

Businessmen sighed with relief when the new government announced that it was decided to end "the bank's intervention in private mercantile activities because such action is considered harmful to the economy of the country."

6. MILITARIZATION OF FEDERAL POLICE FORCE. Panama has no army but it has a federal police force of 1600 men. Dictator Arias undertook to transform a police force into a private army that would be useful in furthering his ambitious schemes. He imported a hard-boiled professional soldier, Col. Gomez Ayau, on leave from the Guatemalan army, to drill and discipline the Arias army. Ayau was arrested and exiled in the coup d'etat. He had been so hard boiled with the Panama police force that it gladly transferred its loyalty to the new regime.

7. SEMI-MILITARY TRAINING OF CHILDREN. Taking his cue from the Hitler-Ley "Strength Through Joy" movement, and from Benito Mussolini, who trained Italian bambinos to march with guns, the Arias dictatorship organized "Cachorros de Urraca," which gathered a membership of 5000 boys between the ages of 10 and 18 years. This children's army had its own marching song, its flags and other emblems, and was planning a mass demonstration at the observance next month of Panama's independence anniversary. The demonstration is off, however, as the organization is being dissolved by the new government on the ground that "its similarity to juvenile organizations of totalitarian tendencies disagrees with the plans for the restoration of democracy." Instead of the children's army demonstration, President LaGuardia will address a mass meeting of 40,000 adults at the independence celebration.

8. GRAFT AND NEPOTISM. Arnulfo Arias saw to it that his relatives and friends and relatives of friends got more than their share of public offices. But there is nothing particularly new about nepotism in Panama. As for graft, there was wide suspicion that the government monopolies in staple foods which raised the cost of living excessively managed at the same time to line the pockets of people close to the administration. Moreover, Dictator Arias replaced the petty pinball gambling machines that adorned Panama when he came into office with slot machines, roulette wheels and baccarat tables. Chicago-made slot machines so intrigued the native Panamanians, working on Canal defense projects and earning real silver and folding money for the first time in their lives, that the more foolish were setting apart 10 per cent of their wages for living expenses and feeding the rest into the iron maws of the "one-armed bandits."

The gambling syndicate, operating close to the government, of course, netted $10,000 a day. By a coincidence, Dictator Arias was buying himself a Panama country estate and town properties, was arranging to buy prospective houses of exile in Berlin and Nice "just in case"——, and was believed to be salting away nice $1000 and $10,000 banknotes in Havana and Miami. United States currency, to be sure, for Arnulfo Arias was too smart to be caught with German or Italian shinplasters.

Now for a postscript on the Prussian vultures over Panama, mentioned in the beginning. The Nazi chief organizer in Panama was Eric Cerjack-Boyna, a mysterious person of Hungarian origin. Ostensibly in the import trade in Panama, Cerjack-Boyna's real business has been that of paymaster and master propagandist of all the German subversive forces in Panama. Seemingly, he outranked in importance Hans von Winter, German Charge d'Affaires in Panama. The State Department blacklisted Cerjack-Boyna's import business, but that did not curtail his political fenagling.

In fact, President Arias smoothed Cerjack-Boyna's devious path by granting him diplomatic status as civilian attache of the German legation. Alas, poor Eric, the new government has declared him persona non grata because of information that he has "abused the privileges of his diplomatic position to engage in political activities adverse to the interests of the Republic of Panama, and which directly tend to affect the security of the Americas in their plans of continental defense."

Simultaneously, the Republic of Panama fired its Minister to Germany and its consul general at Hamburg. The new LaGuardia broom is sweeping clean.

Nazis May Halt For Winter if Latest Drive Fails

London, Oct. 31.—The Nazi military machine is likely to fall back and consolidate for the winter along the Smolensk-Minsk Line if the newest drive for Moscow fails to reach its objective, informed sources here felt tonight. These usually reliable circles expressed confidence, as the fifth week of Fuehrer Adolf Hitler's tremendous "final assault" against Moscow opened, that the city would hold out.

If the inspired Russian resistance and the imminent onslaught of winter weather forces the Germans to fall back to the Smolensk-Minsk Line it was pointed out that the Nazis probably would leave a "fringe" of armored divisions out ahead of them to protect their front. They were already using snowplows on their foremost tanks, it was said.

Fair Enough

LaGuardia Is Lower Case F. D. R.

IF I WERE a resident of the City of New York I would vote against Fiorello LaGuardia in the coming election not so much because I would expect William O'Dwyer, the Democratic nominee, to make a fine mayor, although I think he would be pretty good, as because I am anti-New Deal or new order, and anti-Communist, and Mr. LaGuardia is just a lower-case Franklin D. Roosevelt, politically, temperamentally and every other way, except that he has not allowed any member of his family to fatten up on the spoils of office.

PEGLER

I am a reactionary, that is what I am and I would like to see a political reaction get off to a good start in our largest city. Moreover, I am sick of the Hitleresque, personalized abuse and vengeance which have issued from both the White House and the New York City Hall these last several years and believe it degrades two of our highest offices and provokes intemperance in the people.

At this point you may say that I am a fine one to be objecting to intemperate language; but the answer is that I am not a public official and moreover probably have been affected by the tone of Mr. Roosevelt's speeches and our mayor's, being very young and impressionable.

But, what the hell, men—and you can blame that little vulgarity on our rulers because I never did swear, drink or smoke before 1932—if you are anti-New Deal or new order as to the National Administration you can't consistently support a half-size F. D. R. for an office which, in domestic importance, is second only to the Presidency, itself.

I see where the World-Telegram, which opposed Roosevelt politically in 1940, and Capt. Patterson's Daily News, which has been anti-Roosevelt on the war issue and hot as fire in that opposition, too, are both in LaGuardia's corner in this campaign and I think that is about the silliest display of editorial confusion that I have ever seen. Because LaGuardia is Roosevelt without any reservations that I have been able to discover and the little one is subject to the same objections, pound for pound, that are held against Mr. Big.

LaGuardia is no less pro war than President Roosevelt but I am one who is inclined to string along with, but a little behind, both of them on that issue and therefore probably don't make very good sense if you regard the war as the one and only issue. But I don't regard the war as the one and only. I am afraid and convinced that war has been spelled out for the U. S. A. by past events and Adolf Hitler and, such being my belief, want to know that this sacrifice will not be made for the purpose of creating here by our own efforts or political folly, the very condition that the enemy is trying to inflict on us.

I want to see a mayor in New York and, presently, a President in Washington, who will not only repudiate Communism but run Communists and party liners ragged just as LaGuardia and the President now harass Nazis, bundists and those whom they call Quislings or appeasers.

The attempts to change LaGuardia's name from Little Flower to Butch has failed and the reason is that he just ain't the Butch type. He is a needler and a good showman and don't let anyone tell you he doesn't like his picture in the papers, because his vanity eats it up.

The reason why he seems to be a Butch is that he fights tomcat style and would just as soon chew your nose off or scratch out your eyes, in the sense of repartee, of course, whereas his opponents have been mostly old style, standup, Tom Figg political fighters. But, like Harold Ickes, he will tin-can it if you give him the laces across the mush in the clinches and tromp on his toes and bull him around and he has got by with his rough stuff because most of his opponents have too much dignity and respect for the office and public opinion or too little guttersnipe in them.

A reporter stopped him one day when LaGuardia, in that pip-squeak voice of his, yelled, "I am going to tell your boss on you." The reporter simulated LaGuardia's voice with a high falsetto and screamed back, "Yes, I am going to tell my mamma on you." Did that fry him!

Mammoth Traffic Overpass Is Railroads' Gift to City

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

By the first of next year, Washington will have one of the country's most modern and costly traffic "freeways."

More than three-quarters completed, a new automobile overpass rising some 80 feet above the network of railroad tracks off New York Avenue Northeast, will link the principal arteries on the northwest and southeast sides of the bustling Union Station train yards.

Begun last April by the Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio Railroads, the overpass is scheduled to be opened to District motorists next January.

The mammoth steel and concrete elevated highway, to cost ultimately more than $450,000, will be given outright to the District upon its completion.

Construction costs were levied on the two railroads under the so-called "Union Station Act," which provides for at least four traffic overpasses traversing railroad property within the city limits.

According to Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways for the District, this is the last crossing of its type to be built and will be maintained in the future from municipal highway funds.

Originating from a new road at Sixth Street Northeast off Florida Avenue, the new "superway" overpasses New York Avenue, crosses nearly a score of tracks in the railroad yards and connects with a series of thoroughfares leading to Brentwood Road at Rhode Island Avenue Northeast.

Four of the largest one-piece girders ever used in a land bridge are included in the construction. Each girder is 148 feet long and 6 feet wide and weighs approximately 87 tons. They were built by the Bethlehem Steel Co., and were hoisted into place by the James McGraw Co., contractors on the gigantic job.

Shipping the huge girders from Pottstown, Pa., took six days. The trip had to be specially routed to avoid sharp turns and low underpasses. Three 60-foot flat cars were used to bring the steel material here.

In order to negotiate what turns were encountered, the girders were jacked up and suspended on turn-tables of the first and third cars while the middle car was used as a "bending arc."

Two ramps on the southeast side of the railroad overpass will give motorists free access to New York Avenue.

Capt. Whitehurst described the undertaking as one of the most important steps yet undertaken here for alleviation of traffic congestion in outlying sections of the city.

Overalls With Oomph . . . !

One objective of home economics experts at the Beltsville, Md., experiment station of the Department of Agriculture is a program of work on the clothing needs of women in defense industries that is expected to make Beltsville known as the "Fashion Center of America-at-Work."

A survey shows that it is considered necessary for women to have overalls and other appropriate work garments if they are to do defense work with the utmost efficiency. The garments are to be scientifically studied and planned, and they are to have color and "sex appeal," too.

Clarice Scott, head of the clothing section of the United States Bureau of Home Economics, which maintains offices and laboratories at Beltsville, explained yesterday that "women never have had an overall styled especially for them. We feel that to do their defense jobs well women should have work garments created for them alone."

Especially needed, it was said, are work clothes for women in the aircraft industry, in powder plants and arms factories.

They are to be styled to allow great freedom of bodily movement. Therefore, clothing experts will visit factories to study the motions required by the various jobs, and garments will be patterned to permit these movements.

On the advice of the United States Employment Service, which has conducted a number of studies of industrial hazards, safety features will be incorporated in the garments. Floppy pants legs and flowing skirts will not be permitted; they catch in machinery. Garments for workers in powder plants will be pocketless, to minimize the temptation to carry matches.

Skirts will be retained in most of the garments. True, a mannish pants leg is necessary in, many jobs where protection against dirt or scratching is desired. Streamlined work aprons or smocks may result.

The development of garments for workers in defense industries supplements the bureau's work on clothes for farm women. Last spring 15 work outfits for farm women, some of them adaptable to defense jobs, were created at Beltsville. Four companies are now busy making patterns of the garments for distribution. Two other companies are using the designs to make ready-to-wear clothes.

Samples of these garments have been sent to England. As nearly 50 per cent of the farm work in England is now done by women, a demand from abroad for feminine costumes designed for farm work is expected.

Volunteer Nurses Graduated

The first 19 of 100,000 volunteer nurses' aides that Fiorello LaGuardia wants mobilized for civilian defense, got their caps and pins here yesterday and stood in readiness for the 150 hours of volunteer service promised for each year.

The nurses' aides will do exactly the kind of work their organization name implies. That is, they will assist registered nurses in routine hospital work under hospital discipline and as volunteer workers for national defense.

LaGuardia, director of civilian defense, soon will have another contingent of nurses' aides from Washington, composed in the main of feminine Government employes, it was said yesterday by Mrs. Eleanor Palffy, vice chairman of nurses' aides in charge of class rooms.

The group graduating yesterday was told by Mrs. Walter Lippmann, national director of Red Cross Volunteer Nurses' Aides, that "we are enlisted for the duration. In such times as these it must be a satisfaction to know that you are serving. You have your part to play. I envy you and I wish you God-speed in this best of endeavors, the relief of human suffering."

The shortage of such workers was said by Mrs. Palffy to be acute. She reminded that 25,000 nurses served in the World War, that 5000 have been called so far in this emergency.

The exercises were held yesterday in the District Red Cross Chapter Building at 1730 E Street Northwest. Mrs. Harry S. Bernton, chairman of the volunteer service committee of the District Council of Defense, presented the pins; Mrs. Lippmann presented the caps.

Mrs. Charlotte C. Brady, 1432 Thirtieth Street Northwest; Mrs. Lonetie M. Burton, 2000 S Street Northwest; Mrs. VesLemay Colformsen, of the Westchester Apartments; Mrs. Doris E. Davidson, 1813 North Rhodes Street, Arlington, Va.; Mrs. Mildred H. Davies, 2831 Livingston Street Northwest; Mrs. Margaret Henderson, 3148 Dumbarton Avenue Northwest; Miss Anna B. Hill, 617 South Washington Street, Alexandria, Va.; Miss Sylvia Hurwitz, 100 Baltimore Avenue, Takoma Park, Md.; Miss M. J. Witt, 3914 Morrison Street Northwest; Miss M. B. Wrieht, 1350 Rhode Island Avenue Northeast; Mrs. W. B. Zike, 1304 North Rhodes Street; Mrs. John Van Dealen, 5631 Third Street Northwest; Miss Helen Nolen, 1727 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest; Miss Edgar Merton, 3000 Connecticut Avenue; nue; Mrs. M. W. Meyer, 6312 Utah Avenue Northwest; Miss Celia G. Martini, 4701 Connecticut Avenue; Miss J. J. Rannefi, 7716 Alaska Avenue; Mrs. David Stanley, 237 George Mason Drive, Arlington, and Miss J. J. Werner, 1747-Q Street Northwest.

To Ward Off Signs of Time, Watch Your Hands

By Carolyn Abbott.

"SHOW ME a woman's hands and I'll tell you her age," said a keenly observing, sophisticated man. Hands age more quickly than any other feature, yet they are most neglected.

Also, he might have added that whether shuffling bridge cards, sipping a cup of tea or merely sitting idle, hands are always on display. What to do with them so they will have a modicum of grace is a problem that few solve. Most women swing hands wildly when walking, stuff them in pockets while standing, twist their hair, rings or handkerchief when sitting.

Control is the secret of graceful hands. Daily care is the solution to youthful hands. Also, there are ways to place your hands to make them look younger and more graceful.

Lucille Ball, Hollywood star, says she got her first job as a model in New York (which eventually led to a Hollywood career) because she knew how to walk and hold her hands.

For grace and control, he suggests the following tricks and exercises:

Stand erect, shoulders and back straight. At count of one, step to left, swing both hands up to the right, shoulder height, turning head to left. At count of two, resume original position. Reverse. Make moves precise. Swing hands up, hold them steady a moment, then down.

Then stand erect, feet together, arms curved over head in typical ballet dancer's pose, hands in graceful position. On count of one, bend body to right as far as comfortable, stepping out with left toe for balance. Count two, return to original position. Reverse and repeat.

Here's one a little harder. Stand erect, back straight, in easy posture. On count of one, step back onto right foot, swing both arms to the left in easy graceful pose, about waist high. Count two—return arms to the right. At count of four return to original position.

Message is essential to youthful hands. Try this method. Rub twice daily a good hand cream or lotion into the hands. Massage each finger in a rotary motion. Starting at the base, work toward the tip of digits. Squeeze each finger as if you were pressing out the very blood. This stirs up circulation and also keeps fat from collecting on hands.

To taper the fingers roll ball of finger under each fingernail. Use a cream or lotion, olive oil or coconut oil with this exercise.

Remember, never let the hands hang downward, as it enlarges the veins. The pressure of the blood on the veins increases their size and makes them more conspicuous. Try to keep the hands above elbow, pointed upward to stimulate circulation toward the heart and away from finger tips. Do this when standing or sitting.

To show the hands off to the best advantage, try these tricks:

Don't place hands on same level when standing or sitting. When you sit in a chair, place one hand on arm of chair and the other one in your lap. This staggering or uneven level breaks the squareness and creates a more graceful effect.

Also, when you are standing or sitting, expose the profile of your hand to the person you are facing. To do this, keep the little finger toward one you are facing. The profile is much prettier and more graceful looking than palm of hand.

Actress Describes Care of Her Hands

Hollywood—It is instinct for an actress to be proud of her hands. They are constantly in view, so they must be well-groomed and move with grace.

The simple little trick of working in the residue of face cream left on her hands after a facial massage is used by Faye Emerson to advantage. When she has the time or makes the time, Faye also warms a little castor oil and massages that into her hands, donning a pair of cotton gloves before she climbs into bed at night.

If she sees her nails splitting in spite of this care, Faye increases the amount of milk in her diet, because milk contains calcium, which is nail food.

Giving Consolatory Advice to 'Disillusioned' Wife, Correspondent Says Diminishing Expression of Love In Marriage Is Common 'Behavior Pattern,' Ages Old

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have read with interest your reply of October 29 to "Disillusioned," the young wife who complains that now, after three years' marriage, her once ardently devoted husband shows her only the most perfunctory attention. "Today," she says, "I feel I am taken for granted. He never says he loves or admires me; nor comments on anything I do . . . I must say it is hard to give attention and affection when so little is returned; and as a consequence, I find myself less and less. When I mention my views to him, as I have several times, he only grows colder and will not discuss the matter with me . . . He takes the attitude I should be happy because I have everything (in a material way). And I do have everything, except the one thing I want—which is the old affection, admiration and companionship we enjoyed until we were married."

Whereas you, Miss Haworth, seemed to agree with "Disillusioned" that she has a legitimate complaint, and counselled with her from that point of view, I am inclined to think that another,—a more subjective,—approach to the problem might have proved more helpful to her. Therefore, with your indulgence, I should like to speak my piece on the subject. Had "Disillusioned" asked my opinions, I would have spoken in the following vein:

You ask whether you are having the experience of all "brides,"—in finding yourself seemingly taken for granted by your husband. Surely you know that your problem is shared by countless wives; and countless husbands, too. The problem of decreasing expressiveness of affection in marriage is as common as any behavior pattern in marriage. As is all too evident, such expressiveness may wane to the zero point.

Does it help it realize that you belong to a numberless company of men and women—not only those living and struggling on earth today, but numberless through uncounted centuries, who have loved and seen the caress of touch and word slip away? Perhaps not. But have you ever thought to inquire into the causes of this universal experience? It is true that cures of distress are sometimes effected without our ever having consciously known the cause. But intelligent persons, when confronted by a vexatious situation, know that some cause underlies effect, and they look for the cause as the most direct means of discovering the cure.

Ultimate Test Of Complainant's Sincerity

Are you willing to probe for the cause of your difficulty, no matter where the search may lead, and no matter what the inquiry may reveal about yourself? This is so severe a test of sincere desire to be helped that few persons seem able to meet it. But if you can, I promise that you will be helped. If you go far enough in fearless search, I can even promise that you will find the actual solution. It may not be in the terms which you now want. But it will be the supreme solution of discovering how to meet all problems. Is the reward worth the effort to you? Or do you unconsciously hope for some magic formula for happiness to be handed to you, ready-made? There is no such formula,—at least, none coming under the head of "strategy."

You say: "It is hard to give attention and affection when so little is returned." And therein you state the crux of your problem. "Giving and getting," the language of trade, of swapping commodities. And that, alas, is the usual way of thinking, when thinking of "love." So here we come upon the unvarnished issue.

To the larger view, the remainder of your story is immaterial. The particular circumstances of your unhappiness (as well as your husband's), may afford basis for psychological or psychiatric analyses. Certain causes of your conduct and his may be inferred, and certain recommendations for better adjustment, rising out of presumably greater understanding, can be made. However, your understanding of his actions will not necessarily change them. Nor would he change simply because "error of his ways" was pointed out to him. More likely, his coldness toward you,—and his contrasting tenderness toward your baby daughter,—would only be intensified.

You are jealous of the affection he lavishes upon the child, which affection he withholds (at least in expression) from you. You feel a sense of injury or loss, in being (as you think) deprived of those expressions of affection he once gave you. You would say that you had "lost" something you once "possessed."

But is love something you can "win" or "lose?" Is a person to be reduced to something that you can "get;" and "have," at some period, and then no longer "possess?" We may protest that these are merely figures of speech; but there is more stark actuality in our attitude of "getting," in our relations to others, than we care to think.

Quite candidly, you lament that you no longer "have," (which is to say, "enjoy"), an affectional experience that fed your self esteem. Bluntly put, your ego is wounded by the loss of the admiring attention your husband once paid you. And because your pride is hurt, you are "giving less and less," of love to him,—whether in actual feeling or outward expression you do not say. From which we may infer that what you give is governed by what you receive. Isn't that what you mean to convey?

When so stated, it amounts to a very commercial attitude, doesn't it? Aand that attitude is alien to the nature of love. Love is the desire to release fulness of life. Any thought of receiving, or of repayment, is impossible to love; is dissolved in love. Granted that a reaching out to "get" something to nourish one's pride or self esteem may be, and too often is, a prominent element in the usual attachments referred to by the name of love—nevertheless, that attitude is a stranger to love itself.

Your course is clear. Hereafter, allow only genuine love to control your thoughts. You must not only never utter any reproach for what seems to you to be your husband's "coldness;" but you must cease thinking blame or reproach of any kind. When real love takes over one's life, such attitudes are dropped automatically; and if you are absolutely sincere about wanting to dispel your unhappiness, you can achieve your wish by transforming your thought.

This is a large order, I realize. You cannot expect an immediate transformation; for you are coping with race habits of long standing; with the prevailing conventional attitudes and emotional atmosphere of our society, which obstruct our vision like a heavy mist. But the spirit of love is like sunshine itself. It radiates clarity in the heart that accepts it. No clouds can ever really dim that light.

Beginning today, you can go on without noticing your husband's inexpressiveness, letting the light of your love shine quietly, because no longer concerned with feeding your pride and vanity. You can be happy in the realization that you are fortunate in having a mate with so many excellent qualities, contributing so much to the normal satisfaction of your situation as mother and household executive. Whether his once-tender attitude will return, no one can predict. But suppose it does not. By any long view, you should not be concerned with "changing" someone else. Your proper concern is with needed changes in yourself. And the law of life is this: As we change for the better, others change also—both in actuality and in our view of them.

Diet Should Be Adopted For Good

By Ida Jean Kain

IT'S A mistake to "go on a diet." Any change you make in your weight is the direct result of the change you have made in your food habits and is, accordingly, either temporary or permanent. But why not change for good? The protective foods which form the mainstay of all weight-change menus, reducing or gaining, are the very ones which keep you feeling and looking young.

If you happen to like milk, cheese and eggs, you are just lucky. Science has established milk as one of the main dietary factors in staying young longer. Not only that, but if your grandmotner drank her milk, you will probably live longer than you might otherwise.

Good for All

Milk is a beauty food for the reducer or the gainer. The menus that help you to gain curves should allow one quart of whole milk, plus one-half pint of cream, every day. And the reducing menus should furnish two glasses of skim milk every day. Then, when you have taken care of your weight problem, you should go right on having at least a pint of milk every day.

Milk and cheese are rich in calcium. And eggs together with plenty of green vegetables, will assure sufficient iron. These mineral-rich foods contribute to a smoothly running nervous system and a sweet disposition. It's the highly strung woman who ages fastest.

Some of the protective foods contain more than one of the important elements necessary to healthy beauty. Whatever you may be doing about your weight, you need from 250 to 300 calories daily in protein. Meat is perhaps the leading protein food, but liberal amounts of this element are also furnished in the milk, eggs and cheese already mentioned.

Others Are Needed

To complete the list of protective foods, you need only fresh fruits, vegetables, butter and whole-grain cereals and bread. For the overweight who is living below her calorie requirements in order to draw on her store of fat, this protective list represents almost the entire day's menus. But the underweight who gains only by dint of taking more calories than she spends in energy and whoe calorie intake is limited only by her powers of assimilation, is equally dependent on the protective foods. The additional calories should be taken in the vitamin-high foods. Baked potatoes, creamed soups, custards, bread and butter, all are good.

Get into the habit of eating the foods that are essential to your well being and you won't have any trouble controlling your weight. Habit will make you like these essentials—and you'll find it a simple matter to take or leave the concentrated calories that affect your poundage.

For Wear With Beaver

WITH COOL weather arriving, here are some timely questions from a reader who bought a sheared beaver coat before the fur tax went into effect. The coat was selected without supplementary outfits in mind. Since she wants her costume to play up to the coat, she asks advice on selecting a wardrobe that will last about three years. Instead of a basic black dress (which she considers an integral part of the wardrobe), she recently bought a blue dressy wool. She asks if she made a mistake.

Miss Jean MacColl, fashion consultant of a large department store, gives some interesting suggestions on this problem: First, Miss MacColl feels that it takes a woman with very striking features to carry the combination of a black basic dress with a brown beaver coat. Although she agrees that a basic dress is an integral part of the wardrobe, she points out that it does not have to be black. She suggests a brown crepe—something simple with which varying accessories may be worn.

Since brown and blue go well together, the blue wool was a good selection. Also suggested is a sports wool dress, cut generously with pleats, gathers and detail to take away from the too casual shirtwaist effect. Such a dress in gold color would double with many accessories.

"With the dressy blue wool and brown crepe dresses wear dark accessories," advises Miss MacColl. "Try a tiny brown calot hat and suede shoes and bag." With the casual wool, Miss MacColl thinks one of the inexpensive yarn turbans in gold would be chic. A feathered hat in pastel (especially in blue to match the dressy wool), or natural color, would be an alternate to spice the beaver coat.

"If the budget will allow," added Miss MacColl, "a tweed suit is the perfect costume to include in any wardrobe." She suggested one in dull green with brown alligator calf accessories. The gold turban will go well with the suit as well as with the casual wool. A topcoat, if desired, may be bought to match the tweed suit.

Southern Outfit

DEAR MISS DRISCOLL: I am going to Miami to attend a convention the last week in November. My husband is an officer of the association and naturally I am anxious to take the most suitable clothes. I particularly want to know if light-colored dresses would be appropriate. Also, are white outfits and white shores worn? Daytime wear has me puzzled. Very truly, MRS. R. N. C.

Herman Becker, manager of a smart specialty store, gives the answer to these questions. He suggests that lightweight woolens in pastels, such as pink, blue, gold and natural colors would be more appropriate than all white. On the whole, darker accessories are the general rule, except in the case of the basic black dress, which would be smart combined with a pastel felt hat, according to Mr. Becker.

"After December 15," said Mr. Becker, "the warm weather season of Southern wear fashions really begins. Right now one of the popular pastel dresses would be most suitable and could be worn just as well in Washington under a winter coat." He added that one of last summer's pretty prints would also be appropriate.

Other items Mr. Becker would include in a Southern wardrobe are a sports coat—either camel's hair or a light tone plaid, a tweed suit with a soft cashmere sweater or a two-piece suit with a plaid skirt and a velveteen jacket. He pointed out that this time of year none of these costumes would be too warm in a Southern climate.

Topcoat Problem

A YOUNG woman who keeps up on current fashions writes thus: "I have a two-piece short jacket suit in a conservative tweed. I want an untrimmed coat to go over it. Would one of the fitted reefer coats I have been reading about be suitable? I thought I could also wear it over other costumes."

Margaretta Byers in her book, "Designing Women" gives the answer to this question in one brief sentence. She says, " . . . you can not wear a fitted coat over a suit without looking like a piece of overstuffed furniture." She explains, however, that one does not need a long swagger coat. The boxy, boy style coats are infinitely more becoming and would be suitable with other costumes.

For best fit consider also the shoulders of your suit. For example, a padded shoulder suit will not look well under a coat with raglan sleeves. Consider collar lines too. If most of your costumes, suit included, have high necklines, then the coat should have a V-neckline (or at least a convertible collar that can be turned down) for contrast.

No Scarcity of Toys

Whatever else we have to do without, it won't be toys at Christmastime, say the toy manufacturers. In a grave year like this, we like to hear news like that . . . it recalls the fact that America has learned a lot since the last World War when the shortage of toys was one place the pinch really hurt. At that time most toys came from central Europe.

Pre-Debut Party Given For Marian Hamilton

Renchards Are Hosts at First in Series Of Affairs Scheduled in Her Honor

By Patricia Grady

Coming in rain-drenched but with spirits undampened, the "younger set" poured into the Whitehaven Street home of Mr. and Mrs. George Renchard yesterday afternoon "after 5" to greet the pretty deb-to-be guest of honor, Miss Marian Hamilton. This was the first fete in a series of parties in honor of the tall, blond daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Hamilton, jr., which will be climaxed by a debut tea November 28 at the home of her parents, followed by a dinner at the Shoreham at which her aunt, Mrs. Daniel C. Stapleton, will be hostess.

The vivavcious Mrs. Renchard—the former Stellita Stapleton—received her guests wherever she happened to be, wearing a corsage of gardenias on her gold-trimmed black street-length frock. There was no need for her to introduce her guest of honor, who wore a red-braid trimmed black velveteen frock and pinned a corsage of gardenias on one shoulder, for she seemed to know everyone at the party. The host, who is a foreign service officer with the State Department, circulated about to make sure that everyone located the bar, which was in the hall.

Margaret Hill Chats With Deb-to-Be

Miss Margaret Hill, first bud of the summer season, in a two-piece suit of red wool, found things to talk about with Miss Delphine Colquitt, who will make her bow to society at a tea dance at the Sulgrave Club, November 27. Hamilton Robinson, James McCord and Harry Hoskinson chatted together in a group. Mark Sullivan wandered through the crowd greeting friends on every side. Mr. and Mrs. Randall Hagner, jr.,—she accented her red dress with a chic brown hat—were greeted by Mrs. George Hamilton, jr., who wore a tucked black frock and gardenias. Another Mrs. Hamilton—Mrs. John Hamilton—topping her black dress with a trim, red chapeau, stopped for a few words with the father of the guest of honor, who held a private court of his own. Sidney Lafoon, another foreign service officer, has just returned from his post in Chungking and was being welcomed back by a number of his colleagues who were at the party.

A house-warming, as well as a predebut party, guests took advantage of Mrs. Renchard's carte blanche invitation to inspect the new house and "open every closet if you want to." The drawing room was still in its summer garb of green and beige and contrasted delightfully with the gold-curtained, red-covered chaired dining room. Impishly grinning from a table on the side was a gargoyle-faced pumpkin just to remind those who had forgotten that yesterday was Hallowe'en.

Among Others Who Were Present

Among those at the affair were Miss Louise Hagner, Harry Schwartz and Richard Bolling, who sat in the cozy den; Miss Jane Davis, a neighbor of the Renchards; Miss Patrecia Morris, who set off her green dress with an orchid, Mr. and Mrs. John de Sibour—she in a bright red frock—Mr. and Mrs. Robert Knolton, Mrs. Mark Sullivan, in a gray-green ensemble; Miss Mimi Scott, who wore a corsage of gardenias with her black suit; Miss Yolande Mauduit, in a green jacket-dress; Mrs. Millard West, in a smart dark tailleur; Miss Emily Davis, who wore a white blouse with her black suit, and Smith Bowman.

Dine at Home Of Mrs. Stapleton

After the party, Mr. and Mrs. Renchard, Miss Hamilton, and others of the family group, went on for dinner to Mrs. Stapleton's home on Massachusetts Avenue. It was there that Mrs. Renchard was presented to society several years ago at one of the most brilliant receptions of any Washington season.

Miss Miller Makes Debut December 27

Making a long-awaited late entrance into the ranks of this season debutantes is Miss Sara Booth Miller, whose mother, Mrs. William C. Miller, will present her to Capital society at a dance at the Sulgrave Club December 27.

Now attending the Masters School, in Dobbs Ferry, from which she will graduate in May, Miss Miller will return to Washington December 19 for the Yuletide holidays. Pretty and very blond, the bud-to-be is majoring in art and English at Masters School and plans to attend Sarah Lawrence College next year. A native Washingtonian, she attended the Cathedral School here.

Karl Corby Weds Joan Wiss In Colorful Evening Rites

Bachrach.

MRS. KARL WILLIAM CORBY

Miss Joan Wiss, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Robert Wiss, of South Orange, N. J., was gowned in radiant candlelight satin, fashioned along Balenciaga lines, last night when she exchanged vows with Karl William Corby, son of Mrs. Calvert G. Bowie, of Edson Lane, Rockville, Md., in the Church of the Holy Communion in South Orange, N. J. Her juliette cap and long veil of rosepoint lace were held in place by a coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley, white orchids and bouvardia.

The bride's sister, Mrs. Waldron M. Ward, jr., of Livingston, N. J., was matron of honor, and Miss Margaret Wheaton, of Maplewood, N. J., was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Mrs. Richard R. Wiss, of East Orange; Miss Barbara Goldsmith, of Maplewood; Miss Jane Miller, of Pelham, N. Y.; Miss Nancy Wiss, of Orange, N. J.; Mrs. Parker Schoefield, of Cohasset, Mass., and Miss Minnie Wrightson, of Orange.

All the attendants were gowned alike in deep ivory faille with drop shoulders and full bouffant skirts. They wore headdresses of yellow velvet with long streamers trimmed with clusters of shaggy yellow chrysanthemums. The honor attendants carried crescent-shaped bouquets of a Japanese variety of yellow chrysanthemums, while the bridesmaids carried similar bouquets of a darker shade.

Mr. Corby had Charles Channing, of Chevy Chase, Md., as his best man and the ushers were Charles Camalier, Philip Bowie, Maurice Nee, Josiah Flournoy and Donald D. Kneessi, all of Washington; Edward Castle, of Oshkosh, Wis.; Richard R. Wiss, of East Orange; Waldron M. Ward, jr., of Livingston, N. J., and Richer Mitchell, of Ithaca, N. Y.

Baltusrol Golf Club, Springfield, N. J., was decorated with a profusion of fall flowers for the reception following the ceremony. The couple will leave by plane today for a wedding trip in California and upon their return will make their home in Washington.

The bride was graduated from Sarah Lawrence College and Miss Beard's School. Mr. Corby attended Cornell University.

Miss Lansdowne, John Hunt Will Be Feted Tonight

Miss Muriel Maddux will be hostess tonight to 35 members of the younger set at a dinner at her home on Belmont Road in honor of Miss Margaret Lansdowne and her fiance, John Conway Hunt.

Later in the evening Miss Betty Stewart-Richardson will entertain at a supper dance at her Woodland Drive home. Guests of honor who will share the spotlight with Miss Lansdowne and Mr. Hunt at the dinner and later at the dance will be Miss Joan Dodd and her fiance, David A. Robertson, and Miss Bella Hagner, who will make her debut this year.

Morgenthaus Are Moving To New Home

October 1 may be official moving day for most people, but there are any number of people with packing problems today—and among them are the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr.

The Treasury Chief and his wife (she now has a full time job with the Office of Civilian Defense) are moving from 211 Thirtieth Street where they have made their home for the past three years, to 2424 Belmont Road.

Since their arrival here, the Secretary and Mrs. Morgenthau have leased a number of Capital homes. However, Mrs. Morgenthau was once quoted as saying her happiest days in Washington were in the brief while that she had a small apartment and got her own breakfasts. Naturally with her job as "Deputy Assistant" to Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Morgenthau will spend more time than ever here—and will have less time for "the farm." "The farm," as the family calls it, is in Dutchess County and they used to manage occasional weekends there.

Shortly after their arrival in Washington, following a brief apartment siege, the Morgenthaus leased 2201 R Street, the scene of many an official party—in the days when partying was still considered proper. Some time later they took a home on Kalorama Road.

The house on Thirtieth street that the Morgenthaus will vacate is owned by Mrs. Robert Lister Macneil, who is planning to come to Washington shortly. Mrs. Macneil, wife of the Macneil of Barra, forty-fifth chief of the Clan Macneil of Scotland, has been at her Sands Point, L. I. home. She has been busily engaged in working on the Scottish Clans Evacuation Plan — which was organized for the purpose of making homes in Scottish Highlands for children of the bombed areas of England.

Clifton Webb Is Party Guest

The most popular guest of honor in many a day was actor Clifton Webb, who was the solitary masculine guest at a beer and pretzel party which Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin gave yesterday afternoon in her Shoreham apartment. Now here playing in Noel Coward's Show, "Blithe Spirit," Mr. Webb will return to Washington to appear in the Fight for Freedom patriotic revue, "Fun to Be Free" which will open at the Uline Arena, November 4.

Among those dropping in to meet Mr. Webb were Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, Mrs. Claude Pepper, Miss Pauletta Guffey, Mrs. Lister Lee, Mrs. Scott Lucas, Mrs. Joseph Casey, Mrs. Bruce Smith, Mrs. William Douglas, Mrs. Albert Dewey, Miss Vera Bloom, Mrs. George Strawbridge and several dozen others. Mrs. Strawbridge will entertain the Women's Fight for Freedom Committee at a tea in her Kalorama Road home on Monday.

Chilean Senators On Vacation Tours Leave Capital

Two vacationing Senators from Chile—Senator Maximiano Errazuriz and Senator Luis Ambrosio Concha—left town yesterday after visiting in the Capital for several days.

Senator Errazuriz, who brought his two daughters with him, is on a tour of North America. He has been through the Western States, the Middle West, British Columbia and Canada. He is now en route to Mexico by way of the Southern States and will return to Washington in several weeks for another short stay here. While he was here staying at the Chilean Embassy, President Roosevelt received him and Mrs. Cordell Hull entertained informally at a tea for him and his daughters in her Wardman Park apartment, Thursday afternoon.

Senator Concha, another guest at the Chilean Embassy, is head of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Chilean Senate. A member of the Radical Party—which is now in power in Chile—he is now in New York and will sail November 7 from there for his home.

Still another Chilean visitor, the Minister of Public Health, Dr. Salvador Allende, who is here attending inter-American health conferences, entertained at a luncheon at the Embassy yesterday for membres of the staff. The Ambasador, Rodolfo Michels, was not present as he was in Philadelphia delivering a speech. He will return to Washington today.

Dorothy Wiprud Is Married To Dr. Manning at St. Paul's

Couple to Reside In Durham, N. C., After Bridal Tour

St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Alexandria was the scene yesterday of the marriage of Miss Dorothy Bryden Wiprud, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Wiprud, of Alexandria, and Dr. Isaac Hall Manning, jr., son of Dr. and Mrs. Isaac Hall Manning, of Chapel Hill, N. C.

The Rev. Ernest A. deBordenave officiated at the 6 p. m. ceremony. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her ivory slipper satin gown featured a sweetheart neckline and fingertip veil with seed pearl tiara, and she carried an arm bouquet of white roses.

Miss Ferguson Is Maid of Honor

Her maid of honor, Miss Yvonne Ferguson, of Milwaukee, Wis., was attired in Aztec gold with bouffant skirt and a matching Mary Stuart hat. Miss Barbara Wiprud, of Washington, cousin of the bride, and Miss Betty Call, of Richmond, Va., were costumes like Miss Ferguson's in redwood color.

John Manning, Chapel Hill, N. C., served his brother as best man. Ushers were Howard Manning, another brother, and also of Chapel Hill, and Grant W. Wiprud, brother of the bride.

Relatives and friends of the family were received after the ceremony in the Pan American Room of the Mayflower Hotel. Mrs. Wiprud was gowned in a moss green silk crepe with matching feather hat, while Mrs. Manning, sr., chose royal blue velvet for her hat and dress.

Starting on their wedding trip through the South, Mrs. Manning donned a teal blue velveteen coat, which she wore over a matching wool dress. Her hat and accessories were burnt ginger. The couple will live in Durham, N. C., when they return.

Bride Attended School Here

Mrs. Manning attended Carleton College in Northfield, Minn., George Washington University and Duke Hospital School for Medical Record Librarians. For the past year she has worked as assistant record librarian at Duke Hospital.

Dr. Manning attended the University of North Carolina and Harvard University Medical School. After interning two years at Boston City Hospital, he spent two years as resident physician at Duke Hospital. He is now in private practice in Durham, N. C.

Guests from out of town at their wedding were Dr. and Mrs. Manning, sr., Miss Alice Edwards Jones, an aunt of the bridegroom, and Mrs. John Manning, all of Chapel Hill, N. C.; Miss Marianna Taylor, Columbia, N. C.; Mrs. Guy F. Jensen, aunt of the bride, Minneapolis, Minn.; and Dr. and Mrs. R. G. Arveson, Frederic, Wis.

Beer, Skittles Party Held

With prizes for the best and most original costumes offered, the young set turned out in their most frivilous finery last night for the "Beer and Skittles Club" Halloween dance at the Sulgrave Club.

Among the many attending the costume party were Miss Ruth Quinn, dressed as Alice in Wonderland; Fred Marsteller, who went as an Indian Prince; Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Watson and their house guest, Lady Patricia Latham, attended with a group of guests, and others were Robert Niepold as Diamond Jim Brady, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Moulton, he dressed as a cowboy; Miss Eleanor Meem, who wore a fringed skirt and 10-gallon hat, cowgirl fashion. Mrs. Jouett Shouse, who entertained a group of youngsters at her place, Wolf Trap Farm, went on later with her daughter, Miss Joan Dodd, to attend the dance.

Deweys Honor Envoy Leaving For Russia

By Martha McLean

One of Washington's traffic snarls in one of Washington's drizzling rains made the guest of honor almost an hour late last night, when the Charles Deweys and their son, Peter, had gathered together a group of Mrs. Dewey's "friends, from the Polish Embassy and the Polish colony," to say their farewells—again—to Miss Natalia Aszkenazy. "Again" because Miss Aszkenazy has been partied right and left ever since the Capital heard she will leave her post in the public relations staff at the Polish Embassy here.

Guests Crowd Lovely Rooms

The drawing room of the old Peggy O'Neill house on Capitol Hill, which the Deweys have restored with lovely Old English furniture and, below it, the spacious ground-floor dining room, its shining table loaded with tempting edibles, were both filled with guests waiting to greet her and speculate on just where the Soviet capital will be when she goes there as her country's first full-fledged woman attache to the U. S. S. R. Through the tall doors could be glimpsed a fascinating walled garden outside, glistening in the rain.

Senator Robert A. Taft had to leave soon after Miss Aszkenazy arrived, looking sleek and beautiful in a simple brown frock and not too perturbed about her taxi adventure in the rain. Mr. and Mrs. Paul McNutt were also seen among the guests.

About 6:30 Rear Admiral George Pettengill went in search of his wife, explaining to his hostess, as he refused to sample any of the fascinating goodies, that he had to have dinner by 7—so that he could listen to Information Please. Otherwise, by his own admission, he would be "a terrible grouch."

Friends Encountered On Stairway

During a trek down the very narrow stairway and along the hall, hung on both sides with fascinating old Russian prints, the Misses Pattens, Lieut. and Mrs. Pierre Bernard and Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Rodney deKay, Mrs. Howell Moorhead and Miss Anne Moorhead were among those encountered. "Encountered" is the word, for Mrs. Dewey failed to mention whether protocol, plain bulk or the best interference runners should have right of way on her narrow crimson carpeted stairs. But though there is very certainly only space for one-way traffic, no snarls that could to be likened to Miss Aszkenazy's recent Capital traffic experience were noted.

Women Pick Britain-U. S. Study Plan

Roosevelt-Churchill Program Tops List Of Subjects Offered To Voters' Groups

"The Roosevelt-Churchill Eight-Point Program and Postwar Plans" drew the largest response among 15 subjects suggested for study groups this winter, in a preliminary sampling of the membership of the District League of Women Voters, it was announced yesterday.

In a questionnaire of members' interest in proposed study groups, the second largest number checked another study of foreign policy—"Inter-American Defense." Third highest on the list was "Defense Outposts and Our Strategic Possessions."

Local and national taxation turned out to be the study group which stood fourth in the number of responses.

Gives Information

Mrs. Eugene Duffield, program chairman of the league, gave information on the preliminary sampling yesterday, after the questionnaires filled out at the league luncheon Wednesday had been tabulated.

She emphasized that the 126 questionnaires which were returned that day were only a portion of the number to be expected. Numerous members took theirs home to be filled out later, and these are beginning to filter in, in the mail. With more than 200 persons in attendance at the luncheon, and with a league membership of more than 400, the first tabulation is considered only a tentative index, she pointed out.

The members' preferences for study groups will enter into the department chairmen's planning for the season's work, but they will finally choose the ones which fit into the most effective correlated programs, she pointed out.

Leads With 69

In the returns from the first 126 questionnaires, 69 persons checked the eight-point program and postwar plans, with inter-American defense checked by 60, and defense outposts and strategic possessions, 44.

Each member could check several preferences. Other items on the list were: District public welfare services and defense, 36; District health services and defense, 31; review of legislation affecting child labor, 9; dependent children, 16; public welfare administration, 16; destitute migrants, 15; health insurance and Federal responsibility for public health, 14; care of women offenders, 7.

School facilities and services, 27; living costs, 34; housing, 35; study of model municipal charter, 15; taxation, local and national, 38; public opinion poll on the District government, 15; a seminar on suffrage for the District, 25.

Girl Scout Council to Map Civilian Defense Program

Proposed plans for a Senior Service Scout training program as the Girl Scout organization's contribution to civilian defense will be considered at a meeting of the local council Tuesday, it was announced yesterday by Mrs. Harry C. Kramer, commissioner of Girl Scouts of the District.

The S. S. S. plan, formulated at the recent national convention in Dallas, will be explained to the local council by Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn, a national vice president and a local delegate.

The new program calls for Scouts of 15 to 18 years of age to be prepared for special service in child care, transportation and communication, shelter, clothing, food, in case of emergency.

Although many civilian defense activities have already become a part of the local Scout program, the entire S. S. S. plan would require additional intensive training, it was pointed out.

More than 44,000 Senior Girl Scouts in the Nation are expected to qualify for this service. Among requirements for a girl to enter up are written permission from parent or guardian to participate in emergency service, if called on; satisfactory health examination; standard Junior Red Cross first-aid course.

For this work, a girl would be trained in many specific emergency activities, such as—how to get around in her community in the daylight and dark; how to pack an overnight kit within a limited time with common necessities; principles of fire prevention how to prepare a primitive shelter out of doors; how to make a bed on the ground and construct sanitary arrangements; how to prepare food over an outdoor fire; how to use ordinary tools safely and efficiently.

In addition to Mrs. Glenn, other convention delegates making reports at the meeting will be Mrs. Adolphus Staton, chairman of region 3 committee, and Miss Eleanor Durrett, local Girl Scout director.

This afternoon Mrs. Kramer will greet girls from the Latin-American embassies at a Juliette Low international party at Rockwood, the Girl Scout estate on Conduit Road near Great Falls.

After a cook-out supper, a huge birthday cake, weighing 9 pounds, and bearing 21 small flags of the South American republics, will be cut by Elena Castro, daughter of the Minister of El Salvador, and Miss Barbara Stillwagon, local Girl Scout delegate to the Western Hemisphere Encampment in August.

College Clubs To Confer Here On Freedoms

A conference on "How Can the United States Best Protect Its Freedoms?" will be held here November 27-29 under sponsorship of the Women's College Clubs of Washington, the Office of Civilian Defense and the international relations committee of the American Association of University Women.

The conference, which will feature the old "town meeting" technique of discussion, is the outgrowth of an idea originated by Dr. Dorothy Sells, chairman of the emergency service committee of the Wellesley College Alumnae Association. The idea was further developed at a meeting of seven college presidents who last summer discussed the part college women may take in the national defense program.

The conference is designed "to awaken interest in public discussion and to demonstrate the technique of guiding that discussion," it was pointed out.

All organized women's groups in the city have been asked to send delegates. The college clubs here, which are taking an active part in arrangements, include Bryn Mawr, Smith, Mount Holyoke, Pembroke, Radcliffe, Randolph-Macon, Simmons, Sweet Briar, Vassar, Wellesley, and the international relations committee of the American Association of University Women.

Mrs. Bernard A. Chandler, Wellesley, heads the coordinating committee for the conference, whose members are Mrs. C. Irving Brown, Mount Holyoke; Mrs. Roger Robb, Vassar; Dr. Dorothy Sells, Wellesley; Mrs. Edward Sheffey, Randolph-Macon, and Mrs. Lawrence Vaughan, Pembroke.

The committee arranging for the public meeting is headed by Mrs. James V. Bennett, Pembroke. Working with her are Mrs. Dean Acheson, Wellesley, and Mrs. Harry C. Kramer, Wellesley. The chairman of the publicity committee is Mrs. William W. Chase, Wellesley, and the members of this committee are Mrs. William Galvin, Vassar; Mrs. Algernon S. Gardiner, jr., Randolph-Macon; Mrs. Milo Williams, Wellesley; Mrs. I. William Hill, Mount Holyoke; Mrs. Hugh Butler, Smith, and Mrs. Farnham Blair, Bryn Mawr.

Mrs. Karl Riemer, of Smith, is chairman of membership. Those on her committee include Mrs. James Irwin, international relations committee of the A. A. U. W.; Mrs. Robert Boyle, Radcliffe; Mrs. Nicholas Allen, Sweet Briar, and Mrs. Matt Meyer, Smith. Catoe Loses Motion for New Trial

With his attorneys' motion for a new trial denied and a sentence of death in the electric chair about to be pronounced upon him, Jarvis T. R. Catoe yesterday faced Justice James W. Morris and said calmly:

"After I'm gone the murder will remain unsolved—you won't have the right man."

Then, still stoically chewing on a wad of gum as he did throughout the trial, the convicted sex-slayer of Mrs. Rose Abramowitz heard the justice sentence him to die on February 6.

Previously, the court heard arguments by defense attorneys—Walter M. Shea, George G. Boden, and J. Robert Esher—that a new trial should be given Catoe because his confession and admission to an examining alienist were improperly admitted in evidence.

The judge decided, however, that the matter had been "exhaustively" argued during the trial, and that no new proof had been submitted. He said the question of whether the confession was exacted from Catoe by force had been properly given to the jury to decide, since it was a contested point.

The defense attorneys indicated that they would appeal Catoe's fate to the U. S. Court of Appeals within 90 days.

Play Facilities For Service Men Stirs Controversy

The United States Government Employes Organization demands clubhouse facilities for Negro soldiers and sailors which are the equal of those provided for white servicemen, its president, Edgar G. Brown, said last night.

He asserted that he had protested alleged discrimination to Hugo Wolter, executive secretary of the District defense recreation service. It was announced earlier this week that the Gunton Building, 901 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, would be converted into a U. S. O. clubhouse.

The executive committee of the Rock Creek Citizens Association also sent a letter to District officials objecting to a plan to use the Bannaker Recreation Center at Georgia Avenue and Euclid Street Northwest as a recreation center for Negro soldiers. The letter pointed out that the facilities are now used by Negro children who have available only limited facilities. Further curtailment would be unfair, it said.

Senate Group Due To Get Milkshed Bill Next Week

Renah F. Camalier, municipal adviser to the Senate District Committee, said yesterday that the "open milk shed" bill sponsored by Chairman Pat McCarran probably would be turned over to a special subcommittee next week for hearing.

The measure would amend the District milk law to permit importation of fluid cream from any State, provided it was produced in compliance with standards of the United States Public Health Service.

Consumer groups which advocate establishment of a penny milk program here for needy children, also favor expansion of the District milk shed, pointing out that it would increase the Capital's supply and thereby send surpluses upward. The Federally administered penny half-pint plan requires an adequate surplus for its operation; that is, a supply of milk in excess of fluid needs and which the producer would have to dispose of at the lesser class 3 price.

Wife of Musician Awarded Custody Of 2 Children

Mrs. Kathryn Lampkin was awarded custody of her two children and $25 a month maintenance from her orchestra leader husband, Philip Lampkin, by Justice David A. Pine in District Court yesterday.

Mrs. Lampkin, who has a divorce suit pending against her husband, is living in the same apartment with him at the Clifton Terrace Apartments, under an arrangement by which Lampkin pays rent and grocery bills during pendency of the suit. However, the justice found after listening to arguments by her attorneys, Lewis Shapiro and Alvin Newmyer, that she also was entitled to additional money for clothing and other expenses.

If she leaves the apartment or her husband ceases to pay the rent, he directed, she can ask for an increase in the payment. The court was told that Lampkin is making $75 a week from his theatre work.

Danville, Va., Oct. 31 (AP).—When his father, Will H. Johnny found a man ransacking a room of his home and fired three times with his father's .32 rifle at the intruder. He missed, but the man fled.

Safety in Numbers

San Diego, Calif., Oct. 31 (AP).—Mrs. Helen B. Priest, senior hostess at Camp Callan, announced that Private James K. Wealand, former Ponca City, Okla., dancing instructor, would give lessons in the service club hall. She made arrangements to accommodate a dozen. But more than 100 khaki-clad selectees showed up, their enthusiasm undampened even by the lack of feminine partners.

Job Security Board Backs Tax Slash

Also Favors Raising Minimum Benefit To $20 a Week for 20 Weeks

Complete support by the District Unemployment Compensation Board of a reduction in local employer's pay roll taxes from 2.7 per cent to one-half of 1 per cent was voiced yesterday by Commissioner J. Russell Young in his capacity as chairman of the board.

At the same time he told a House District subcommittee that the board favors raising present unemployment compensation minimums from $18 for 19 weeks to $20 for 20 weeks.

The subcommittee chairman, Representative McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, said the subcommittee's recommendations will be made public next week after the views of members of the Social Security Board on the pending legislation have been learned.

The measure sponsored by Representative McGehee seeks to reduce the 24 million dollar surplus which the board has accumulated during the past four years. It has been variously estimated that the reduction in tax rate would save Washington employers between one and four million dollars annually.

C. I. O. Voices Only Opposition

Only voice raised in protest of the measure at yesterday's hearing was that of Sidney Katz, representing the Maryland-District Industrial Union Council (C. I. O.), who said his organization is opposed to reduction by any means—either by the proposed flat rate or by the other means of experience rating.

Agreeing that the present fund is "inordinately large," Katz nevertheless declared that "after the present emergency problem has passed, all kinds of unemployment problems will be created."

He proposed that the unemployment compensation system should be Federal, with local employes contributing to a central Federal fund which would be dispensed throughout the Nation according to needs.

He also urged that the local compensation system embrace "as many categories of Federal workers as possible"; the estimated 25,000 domestics in the District, and employes of public institutions.

Other Changes Suggested

Other suggested changes in the plan included: special benefits for Army selectees; a raise in the benefit rates; a shortening of the time before the unemployed starts receiving compensation; and the creation of an advisory board in which labor organizations would have a voice.

Fred S. Walker, representing the District Central Labor Union (A. F. of L.) told the subcommittee his organization approved a reduction in the employer's tax rate and proposed the same rate of benefits as those suggested by the board itself.

"We fail to see much merit in the experience rating plan," he said. Under such a system, he explained, individual employers are required to pay into the fund an amount equal to payments from the fund to their former employes.

He pointed out, as an example, the difference between a bank and a construction company, saying that the uncertainties of projects faced by the construction company result in a large labor turnover. This fact would place it in an unfair state in comparison with the bank, in the rates it would have to pay under the experience rating plan, he said.

Board of Trade's View

Stating that the sum of nearly 24 million dollars now held by the compensation board "has been withdrawn from productive enterprise in this city," Lawrence E. Williams, of the Washington Board of Trade, continued:

"More than that, it has been collected from all employers, regardless of whether or not those employers are operating at a profit. It is a sum of money which, based on past experience, is sufficient to pay all benefits under the law for a period of more than 10 years without collecting one additional nickel in taxes."

Arthur J. Sundlun, president of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, told the subcommittee his organization believed the McGehee bill would overcome "certain inequalities."

He pointed out that at the present 2.7 per cent tax rate more than seven million dollars was being collected annually, while the claims are only slightly more than two million dollars each year.

Police Hunt Three Men in Robbery Of Taxi Driver

A trio of holdup men were being sought by police last night after a 25-year-old cab driver reported the men robbed him of $15 and his taxi and threw him in a ditch after clubbing him over the head.

Douglas Bailey, 25, of Takoma Park, Md., said he was hailed by the bandits at Fifth and G Streets Northwest, and directed to drive to Minnesota Avenue and D Streets Southeast. When he stopped, two of the passengers drew revolvers, took his wallet and ordered him into the back seat.

Bailey said the men forced him to lie on the floor and keep his head covered with his coat while they drove around. At University Lane and Colesville Road, near College Park, one of the men struck him with the butt of a gun and threw him from the car.

He was taken to the Washington Sanitarium by a passing motorist and treated for lacerations to his head.

The cab had not been located last night.

Halloween was generally celebrated indoors in the District last night.

Rain which continued into the late hours dampened the spirits of many adventurous youngsters and materially reduced the number of police calls to investigate acts of rowdyism and vandalism.

Most of the usual youthful enthusiasm seemed to have been released at numerous masquerade parties and dances held throughout the city. Police had to answer calls to investigate cases of gates unhinged and similar nuisances, but the number was smaller than in previous years, police reported. Up to midnight no arrests were made, because police arrived in each case after the mischievous lads had vanished.

Civic organizations in all sections of the District held parties for various age groups.

One of the more elaborate programs was the one conducted by the Georgetown Boys Club in an effort to keep youngsters out of mischief. Three parties were held with more than 2000 attending.

"I doubt if more than 15 or 20 kids were running loose on the streets in Georgetown by 8 o'clock," George P. Mullen, recreational director, said.

Youngsters under 16 packed into Gordon Junior High School in Georgetown for a masquerade party. Motion pictures and a professional magician provided entertainment. Fifteen and 16-year-old members of the Georgetown Girls Club gathered at Curtis School, Wisconsin avenue and O street Northwest for an invitation dance. Youngsters over 16 held a dance at Twenty-eighth and M streets Northwest, a special feature of which was a crooning contest.

The Chevy Chase Citizens Association entertained nearly 2500 children with two four-hour motion picture shows. The parties were held at the E. V. Brown School and Woodrow Wilson High School.

Contests, including peanut pushing with the nose, pie eating and balloon blowing featured the affair at the Central Branch of the Washington Boys Club at 230 C Street Northwest.

A "Carnival of Imagination" was the theme of a costume party at the Arts Club, 2017 I Street Northwest. Prizes were given for the most realistic costumes.

Street celebrations previously planned were called off because of the rain. Signs of the indoor parties were present on the streets, however.

George King, 4219 Canal Road Northwest, was adjudged "best crooner" at the Georgetown party for the "older" youngsters. Miss Mary King, 21, 1218 Twenty-ninth Street Northwest, was awarded a prize for the best costume present. She dressed as a comic strip character. Miss Helen Fillmore, 19, of 3619 Thirty-sixth Street Northwest, received second prize for her representation of a Gypsy.

Some celebrations will continue tonight with a number of events scheduled. The National Press Club will open the fall season with a supper dance at its headquarters in the Press Building.

The Junior Council of the National Council of Jewish Women will give an "all-spooks" dance at Annapolis Hotel.

Girl Holdup Witness Now Asks for Jail

Changes Attitude In Hyattsville Case; Woman Companion Insists on Liberty

Wanda Bettina James, 26-year-old government witness in the $50,000 Hyattsville bank robbery case, yesterday joined her companion, Webb Shahady, 27, in asking to be kept in jail until the case is tried.

The day before she had opposed a government motion to commit her to jail as a material witness. She is one of a trio who were taken into custody with Hilliard Sanders, known also as Four Roses, charged with having driven a "getaway" car in the holdup. They were arrested on a wild spending spree in Charlotte, N. C.

Shahady did not protest the commitment on the previous day, asserting that he feared for his life if released from jail, but no reason was given for the woman's change of heart. They were placed under the custody of the United States Marshal here by Justice James W. Morris and are to be transferred to the custody of the marshal in Baltimore.

Second Woman Fights Detention

The two, along with dark-haired and tight-lipped Marilyn Wilson, are expected to give important testimony on Tuesday when the Government will seek to indict Sanders in a Baltimore court.

The second woman is still fighting efforts of the United States Attorney's office to keep her in jail, and her attorney, James J. Laughlin, filed a writ of habeas corpus yesterday, asserting that she was being illegally detained. After considerable wrangling with Assistant United States Attorneys Bernard Margolius and Alan Krouse, the writ was signed by Justice David A. Pine, and a hearing set for 10 a. m. today.

The 33-year-old witness is now in the custody of the United States Marshal, having consented to a temporary commitment following a hearing Thursday.

Reluctant to Reveal Case

Margolius and Krouse have been trying to prove that the trio are material witnesses without revealing to Laughlin, who also represents Sanders, just what evidence they can furnish to the grand jury in the holdup of two Prince Georges Bank & Trust Co. Messengers September 15.

A habeaus corpus hearing for Sanders, calculated to test a removal order which would send "Four Roses" to Baltimore for indictment, is also scheduled for 10 a. m. today. The removal order was signed by Justice Morris on Thursday, but was made subject to the outcome of the habeas corpus proceedings in Sanders' behalf.

All three of Sanders' spending companions have given local addresses. Both Shahady and Wanda James said they lived at 1305 Twelfth Street Northwest, while Marilyn Wilson's residence was said to be 634 New York Avenue Northwest. They were arrested with "Four Roses" following his purchase for $1500 in small bills of a new, gleaming yellow automobile with red wheels at Charlotte.

Kelly to Receive Title Today As Police Head

Acting Superintendent of Police Edward J. Kelly today becomes titular as well as actual commander of the Metropolitan Police Department.

He will be "sworn in" as major and superintendent at ceremonies in the office of Commissioner John Russell Young at 10 a. m.

The retirement of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police chief for eight years, became effective yesterday.

Immediately following the swearing in exercises, Kelly will return to Police headquarters and administer the oath of office to Inspector Harvey Callahan, new assistant superintendent; Capt. Clarence Talley, who becomes an inspector, and Lieut. Archie Winfree, who receives a promotion to captain. Oaths also will be administered by Kelly to a number of other officers who receive stepups.

Mrs. Bisgyer's Burial Tomorrow At Har Sinai

Funeral services for Mrs. Sarah Bisgyer, 75, widow of Joseph Bisgyer, of Baltimore, who died yesterday at her home, 3207 West Rogers Avenue, Baltimore, will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow at the home. Burial will be in Har Sinai Temple Cemetery, Baltimore.

Surviving are four sons, Maurice Bisgyer, of Washington, national secretary of B'nai B'rith; Gustave Bisgyer, of Baltimore, executive secretary of Y. M. H. A. and Y. W. H. A.; Samuel S. Bisgyer, of Brooklyn, N. Y., special assistant to the attorney general, United States Department of Justice, and Henry Bisgyer, of Jersey City, N. J., two daughters, Mrs. Irving Franklin, of Kew Gardens, Long Island, and Mrs. Samuel Solomon, of Baltimore.

Senate Action Due Next Week On Appointment of Hankin

GREGORY HANKIN,

The Senate next week will receive the recommendation of its District Committee that Gregory Hankin, Federal Power Commission attorney, be appointed to the District Public Utilities Commission.

Hankin was confirmed for the post by a vote of 4 to 2 by the committee yesterday. Senator Clark (Democrat), of Idaho, will make the committee's report to the Senate.

Voting for Hankin's appointment at a special District Committee meeting yesterday with Senator Clark were Senators Austin (Republican), of Vermont; Capper (Republican), of Kansas, and Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama.

McCarran, Holman Opposed

Charmain McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, and Senator Holman (Republican), of Oregon, opposed his being placed on the commission.

President Roosevelt nominated Hankin to the PUC last March. The Senate took no action on the nomination while rumors were afloat on Capitol Hill that Hankin was affiliated with the Communist Party.

Late last month a special Senate District subcommittee headed by Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, conducted a hearing at which Hankin completely cleared himself of the Communist charges in the minds of the subcommittee. It thereupon unanimously indorsed him for the position.

Voicing opposition to the appointment yesterday, Chairman McCarran declared that "if the files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are not of importance in such a case, they might as well be abandoned for future references." He did not specify what information on Hankin the F. B. I. possessed.

Testifying on behalf of Hankin at yesterday's meeting were Claude L. Draper, vice chairman of the Federal Power Commission; Robert L. O'Brien, former chairman of the Tariff Commission; and William A. Roberts, former public relations counsel for the District government.

Citizen Opposed Action

John A. Savage, who identified himself as a "renter of property" in the District, told the committee he was opposed to Hankin's appointment on the basis of his lack of qualifications for the PUC position.

Chairman McCarran replied that the committee was only interested in Hankin's views on the democratic form of government.

More than a dozen items are awaiting the attention of the District Public Utilities Commission, which regularly possesses a three man board, but whose present membership is confined to Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz. No decisions can be rendered by the Commission until the membership is increased.

Preceding yesterday's full District committee meeting a subcommittee failed to report favorably on a House-originated measure allowing minors between the ages of 14 and 18 to appear in stage performances in the District, provided the children have completed the equivalent of at least eight grades of schooling.

The measure was opposed in brief testimony by Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, representing the District League of Voteless Women Voters, and Leifur Magnusson, representing the Monday Evening Club.

More than a dozen other witnesses were polled by Renah F. Camalier, the Senate District Committee counsel, and resulted in the subcommittee's decision to consider the maasure further.

Rise in Food Prices Impends In Cafeteria of U. S. Buildings

An increase in the price of food served in Government building cafeterias is "almost certain" because of increased wage costs, Arthur J. Williams, president of the Welfare and Recreation Association, said last night.

Negotiations with representatives of United Cafeteria Employes' Local 41 concluded early yesterday resulted in wage concessions which will cost the association $100,000 annually, Williams said. The agreement, tentatively approved by union representatives, was subject to ratification by the union membership last night.

Concessions granted amounted to a rough 10 per cent wage increase, Williams said. A clause providing for renewal of negotiations in the event of a sharp rise in living costs also was included. The union yielded its demands for free uniform laundry service and a check-off of all employes.

Increased food prices will be withheld for a month to see how the new wage scale works out, Williams said. Unless conditions change fundamentally by that time, the 25-cent plate lunch will then be increased to 30 cents, he said. An effort will be made to hold other prices at present levels.

Commuting Train Plan Held Futile

Spokesmen of Three Railroads Assert Lack of Demand Causes Loss Now

Representatives of three railroads yesterday threw "cold water" on proposals to establish a train commuter service into Washington from suburban Maryland and Virginia areas.

Meeting with Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, the three—speaking for the Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio and Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroads—were skeptical of the benefits which might result from the suggested "interurban" transportation service.

The original commuter plan was presented as a partial remedy to Washington's traffic congestion problem. Proponents suggested that the situation could be relieved if motorists beyond the city limits would leave their cars home and use rail service.

Traffic Declining

Fewer persons than ever before, railroad spokesmen told Capt. Whitehurst, are taking advantage of train facilities from adjacent Maryland and Virginia communities into the District.

As an example, John B. Mordecai, traffic manager of the R. F. & P., reported that only 31 persons daily use his road between here and Quantico, Va. And of these, he said, five board the commuter train in Alexandria and only one of the entire group has a round-trip ticket.

From Alexandria into Washington, said Mordecai, it costs his company $90 a day to run two trips— morning and afternoon. If 300 persons a day used the service, he explained, the fares collected would amount to only $60.

Others Are Pessimistic

The B. & O. and Pennsylvania officials were equally as pessimistic over possibilities of establishing a regular commuter train run into the city.

The train company representatives however, agreed to furnish District officials with a report in the next few days on the advantages and disadvantages of commuter service.

Attending yesterday's conference also were Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, Daniel Moorman and Edward H. Riecks, of the B. & O. and B. R. Tolson, representing the Pennsylvania Railroad.

'Maltese Falcon' Soars High on Earle Screen

DASHIELL HAMMETT'S chills-and-fever fable of "The Maltese Falcon," as scenarized and directed for the screen by John Huston, will soar swiftly into the top brackets of taut entertainment in the estimation of all those addicted to the whodunit-crime-doesn't-pay school of stark and livid melodrama.

The Warner Brothers' new hair-trigger edition of this sturdy old tale of mystery and murder, turned loose for the first time on a Washington screen at the Earle Theater yesterday, is in every respect the superior of the same company's release of the yarn ten years ago, with Ricardo Cortez and Bebe Daniels starred. A grim and bitter realism supplants the heavily accented comedy note of the earlier film and, with all respect to the former cast, the present one is infinitely better.

There is enough audience befuddlement in the early sequences of the picture to do for a dozen adventure stories. The consequences of a 17-year chase of a fabulous bauble are depicted first, in the form of a series of quick and unexplained murders. The solution of the whole thing is run down from there, with everybody involved, including the private detective who undertakes the case, a liar, a double-crosser, a thief or a killer. It all comes out, of course, right side up in the eyes of the law and the Hays production code, with the fly cop turning in even the lovely lady crook with whom he has not inexplicably fallen in love. Not inexplicably, that is, if anyone could do with a gal who couldn't be trusted as far as you could throw her from a standing start!

This Maltese falcon, as every reader of crime stories must know by now, is ostensibly a solid gold statuette of one of the birds, solidly incrusted with precious gems and worth millions. Fashioned as a kingly tribute, it has been knocking about the world for centuries, its true value unknown. So one Mr. Kasper Gutman dedicates 17 years of his uninhibited life to running the trinket down, and Private Detective Samuel Slade devotes about as many days of his to running down Mr. Gutman. The developments that accrue to his professional efforts are enough to curl your hair. While in the large view they are pretty much according to homicidal Hoyle, they are no more free from defects than the falcon that finally blasts the hopes of all who have been on its tortuous trail. For instance, even private detectives, working on their own, seldom hand back the gun to culprits who only a moment before have threatened their lives with it. And when you're out to get an officer who has the goods on you and get him, you don't let him escape, provided you circulate in the best criminal circles. In the general excitement, these occasional inconsistencies probably will not even be noticed. You'll be too busy biting your fingernails.

Cast Always On Its Toes—and Yours

Although Humphrey Bogart is cast as Detective Slade, he is still a pretty tough mug to handle and is almost as crooked in money matters as the gang he is chasing around. It is a role that ranks up there with the ones he had in "Petrified Forest" and "High Sierra." As the girl in the case—and what a girl!—Mary Astor matches her personal beauty with the cussedness of a superb duplicity. In the role of the arch-plotter, that mainstay of the Lunts' more or less permanent acting ensemble, Sidney Greenstreet, transfers to the screen one of those perfect performances that have gained him such note on the stage. As his principal trigger men, Peter Lorre and Elisha Cook, jr., are immensely helpful, as is Lee Patrick in the role of Slade's ubiquitous and unfailing private secretary. Barton MacLane, Ward Bond and Jerome Cowan are among those prominently cast and probably through a sentimental desire to be in his son's first picture, Walter Huston appears briefly in a "bit" part toward the end.

In celebration of their third anniversary at the Earle, the Roxyettes pretty thoroughly dominate the dandy stage revue Harry Anger has carved out of the birthday cake. Their routines are elaborate, colorful and intricate, all executed with the skill characteristic of the most gifted group of girls that ever cavorted on a local rostrum. Gil Maison and his extraordinarily well-trained boys, and that monkey; the "Mimic Men," six singing impressionists of the top flight, and the Hermanos Williams Trio, whose gymnasticism and singing take the form of an "acrobatic tango" as unique as last week's Equillo Brothers, combine to put on a swell show.

An especially timely and interesting issue of the newsreel—with the U. S. S. Kearny, the coal strike and Windsors featured—and a particularly diverting Looney Tune cartoon comedy complete a sockdolager of an "escapist" bill.

Metropolitan

It so happens that films which purport to deal with a trouble present turn out to be as stuffy as the phrase, "troubled present." Such a picture, however, is not "Hold Back the Dawn," which with Charles Boyer, Olivia DeHavilland and Paulette Goddard in the leading roles, reopened yesterday morning at the Metropolitan.

"Hold Back the Dawn," with its story of a not-quite-admirable refugee trying to gain admittance into these United States, is very much of this bitter day, yet it has a romantic hope for the present as engrossing as it is likable. Boyer plays a continental gigolo whose clientele has deserted France for the safety of America. He's at the Mexican border trying to get in. One of his former partners, artfully played by Miss Goddard, puts him wise to the fact that an American wife would cut short his waiting time. A traveling school teacher (Miss DeHavilland) becomes the much-needed wife. With the romantic setting of a Mexican fiesta, the situation gets becomingly out of hand.

Chief virtue of "Hold Back the Dawn" is its skillful combination of reality and romance. The siren Miss Goddard plays is true to the last and the change in our hero is not too complete for comfort. Mitchell Leisen's direction is particularly resourceful, with the director appearing to novel advantage as the story begins. Yes, "Hold Back the Dawn" achieves the near-impossible by making an escape into the present.

Broadway Glossary

New York, Oct. 31.

DUEL: Ione Shriber, the detective-story writer, whose latest book is "Family Affair," lives in Akron, Ohio. When the newest female detective-story writer, Gypsy Rose Lee, appeared in Akron recently, Ione was invited to attend a luncheon for the visitor . . . They eyed each other cautiously at the introduction. "Y'know," Gypsy began, "holding one's finished book in one's hand must be as thrilling as holding one's new born babe" . . . "That isn't true," Ione dissented. "Actually, there's no comparison" . . . "Well, of course darling, I wouldn't know," said Gypsy. "I've never had a baby" . . . "Well, I have," said Ione "—and books are much more exciting."

WILLIAM C. FIELDS

CELEBRATION: A week ago yesterday Moss Hart celebrated his thirty-seventh birthday. He celebrated it while he was busy directing the new show, "Junior Miss." During a recess, a Western Union messenger appeared before him, and began singing "Happy Birthday," adding that this was message from the cast . . . When the celebration was over, and the rehearsal resumed, Hart noticed that the messenger hadn't left the theater. He was a member of the cast, who plays the role of a Western Union messenger. "The sentiment was just as sincere," he explained, "—and we saved money."

ENTERPRISE: Joseph B. Breed 3d was the assistant editor of "Brazil Today," until recently. Breed had been intrigued by an expression George Bernard Shaw used in the preface to "The Apple Cart"—the expression "Breakages Limited." It was a description of a type of destructive economics discussed in the preface . . . Breed complained to Shaw that this theme had not been developed in the play itself . . . "You do it, and use the title," said Shaw—the first time he voluntarily parted with a piece of his literary property . . . Breed resigned from the magazine and now is at work completing his play, called "Breakages Limited."

PATTERN: Joe Frisco now confesses that his newest dream-prince is W. C. Fields. Frisco, the veteran dancer-comic, declares that Fields is his favorite comedian, and that everything Joe now does is patterned after Fields . . . "The s-s-similarity is amazing," Frisco vows. "I now c-c-can hold almost t-t-two quarts of l-l-liquor."

LUCK: Last year, when Frisco fell upon evil days, he met a wealthy sportsman at Santa Anita. Joe gave him some tips on the horses. In return, the sportsman—who bet $100 on each race—bet $50 for Frisco. But in none of the races did Frisco's tip come in . . . He went wearily, to the Brown Derby, where he turned for consolation to Solly Violinsky. "Finally get a g-g-guy to bet $50 a r-r-race for me," Joe sighed, "and can't get a w-w winner. What'll I do now?" . . . "Get rid of that guy," Violinsky advised. "He's unlucky for you."

CHATTER: The Metropolitan Benjamin, the Russian prelate, didn't speak at the Russian War Relief Benefit Show because the White Russians threatened to withdraw their contributions if he did . . . West Fifty-second Street—the night club belt—now has an official air raid warden . . . Les Brown has recorded Henry Nemo's newest song, "'Tis Autumn." Nemo bills himself as "Assistant King of Everything" . . . The Windsors told Gertrude Lawrence that "Lady in the Dark" was the first show they'd seen since the abdication . . . Elizabeth Hawes, the fashion designer, now wears patchwork dresses made from the flags of every nation. One section of the dress is reserved for the Axis.

Star Seeks Stars

HEDDA HOPPER

Musical Bon-Bon Saves Starving!

Hollywood, Oct. 31.

I've rarely seen such theater-starved people as the bunch of celebrities attending the opening of "They Can't Get You Down." The orchestra of five sounded like fifteen. The rapier-edged satire, "Mittel-Europa," sung by Berni Gould with his cousins, was alone worth the price of admission. Dance routines were refreshingly novel, and what the kids lacked in experience they made up in youth and enthusiasm.

JUDY GARLAND

In the first row sat Mickey Rooney, itching to get up on the stage and join them. Ditto Judy Garland, whose new dark hair is tres becoming. Laird Cregar, to be nearer the stage, moved up to the first row. He'd just come back from a 3-day spree in the New York theaters, where he lost his voice . . . Reggie Gardiner was whistling "They Can't Get You Down" after the first chorus. There, too, was Nancy Hamilton, who runs her own little theater in Nantucket. She's here working on the screenplay of "Dubarry Was a Lady." Dorothy Parker had her usual seat, ditto the Alfred Hitchcocks.

We're all wishing Loz Russell and Freddie Brisson great happiness. But if any producer had asked her to wear in a picture that droopy peasant wedding veil which she wore at her own wedding, I'd like to have heard the fireworks from Roz. Wow! . . . Her sister, Mrs. Chet La Roche, and Chet are getting tanned at Palm Springs. They turned down the use of Errol Flynn's yacht. I thought that yacht had been turned over to the Government.

ᔓ

Norma Shearer's not only cut, but bleached, her hair, and never have I seen it so becomingly done. Just a soft halo around her face. She said, "I'll probably have to marry Sidney Guilaroff to keep it this way—it has to be waved daily." Norma's never looked more beautiful. She was wearing pajamas of crepe in a leopard skin pattern, and her own Layken-designed orchid of gold, trimmed with topaz and diamonds. When I asked her what was new, she said, "Well, I now have four children. But don't worry—the other two are just Sylvia Fairbanks' niece's, who are stopping with me while their mother's in Boston.

ᔓ

Ann Sheridan had a fan letter from a sailor asking for a date, with a heap of personal questions. At the bottom he wrote, "If you've ever been out with a marine, just tear this up and forget I ever wrote you."

ᔓ

Well, blow me down! Basil Rathbone got a gold trophy for having the most expressive eyes on the screen. And here all the time I thought they belonged to little Roddy McDowall.

WHY DO WOMEN CRY AT A WEDDING?

THEY even cry at "Quiet Wedding," which is just a movie, although it's also true that they laugh and giggle inwardly a lot.

IT was just like the English to film a lovely story like this, one utterly unconnected with war, while bombs were raining down on them from the Heinkels overhead.

AND it was like them to get their loveliest star, Margaret Lockwood (of "The Lady Vanishes" and "Night Train"), and their best director, AnthonyAsquith (who made Pygmalion), to collaborate and assure the proper kind of wedding.

IT was all for morale, of course, and they succeeded. Hundreds of thousands of English men and women have attended "Quiet Wedding" and lost their hearts to it. The women cried, proving it was a good wedding.

THEN the picure came to Washington. And Nelson Bell, of The Post, Jay Carmody, of the Star, Don Craig, of the News, and C. H. B., of the Times-Herald, Washington's value-minded film critics, weighed its appeal and said nice things that ran from "It will steal your heart!" to "The comedy treat of the season."

SO if you're a woman, come and cry; and if you're a man, come and enjoy—"Quiet Wedding," now in its third week at the Pix Theatre, 13th and H Streets N.W.

(Because of the demand for the continuance of "QUIET WEDDING" the next attraction, "Philadelphia Story" has been postponed.)

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

"Dear Sir," writes Mr. Thomas L. Dooley, of Bethesda, Md., "did you ever stop to think that there are thousands of persons who don't give a heck about football and that the sports pages are a blank to them when the baseball season ends . . . I am a 12-month baseball fan and I know there are plenty others who insist on baseball news even in the fall and winter . . . so I hope you will bear this in mind."

POVICH

Well, cancel my subscription, if I don't think Mr. Dooley is somewhat correct. The baseball fan is, indeed, a tireless guy, and we do know folks to whom football, hockey and horse racing is so much eye-wash. So herewith is a sop to our baseball friends:

The Cleveland Indians are always an off-season topic, whether they are firing a manager, plotting a rebellion or alibi-ing their failure to win the pennant. This winter the Indians seem to be the object of sympathy. Some time before Christmas, Bob Feller will take his leave of the Cleveland Club and join up with the Army. Where does that leave the Indians? Probably in the second division.

The Indians have always been a first-division club ever since Feller burst on the scene as a winning pitcher. He was the great guarantee that the Indians would be a factor in the pennant race. Subtract his habitual 20-victory campaigns from the Cleveland pitching and you have left a very mediocre staff indeed. If the Indians' worst enemy had plotted to wreck 'em, he couldn't have devised a more diabolical means.

Who Manages Cleveland?

But, as usual, there is again a comic situation in the Cleveland front office. Manager Roger Peckinpaugh may or may not be the manager of the club. Owner Alva Bradley, who annually confuses the situation in Cleveland, is now hinting that Peckinpaugh isn't his mnager despite the fact that Peck still has one year of a two-year contract remaining. Bradley suggests that Peck will be booted upstairs into the general management of the club and that the managerial job at Cleveland again is open. Ho-hum.

The Nats, incidentally, can commiserate with the Indians. This blasted war hasn't done them any good. Buddy Lewis' 10-day grace to file an appeal from his Class A-1 status expired yesterday and Lewis made no move to seek further deferment. He'll be in the Army by November 17, according to his North Carolina draft board, if he doesn't beat 'em to it by an enlistment. The latter is probable. Lewis has had a predilection for the air corps ever since he took his first plane ride last winter and he wants to join up.

A Washington club without Lewis scarcely threatens to be an improvement over the team that finished in a tie for sixth last season with Lewis. The only man on the Nats who is a better hitter than Lewis is Cecil Travis. Lewis was never any great shucks as a third baseman, but by mid-season of 1941 he had developed into a completely tolerable outfielder. Replacing him will be the Nats' big job next season, perhaps too big.

Nothing Smug About Yankees

Advices from New York are that the Yankees aren't completely satisfied with their pennant-winning club. There is the matter of Johnny Sturm a .247 hitting first baseman that Manager Joe McCarthy would like to remedy. McCarthy still has eyes for George McQuinn, of the Browns, and this winter may see the Yanks and Browns in a deal. Neither is McCarthy exactly content with his outfield, although every other manager in the league would be. Neither Tommy Henrich nor George Selkirk hit .300 last year, and McCarthy regards that as a sin for a Yankee outfielder. McCarthy may go after Chet Laabs, of the Browns. You could hardly say the Yankees are smug.

The Tigers are a cinch to be a better ball club than last year. What team wouldn't improve with the addition of such as Hank Greenberg. Big Hank, only 30, should be able to move back into baseball without much trouble despite his 8 months in the Army. With no heavy packs to carry in this age of mechanized training and warfare, Greenberg is scarcely muscle-bound as a result of his Army service. That used to be the complaint, you know, of ball players in the last war . . . that their shoulder muscles were overdeveloped by lugging heavy packs on long marches.

A blow that was just as tough as the Indians' loss of Feller has befallen Connie Mack in his loss of Outfielder Sam Chapman to the Army. Chapman, a .340 hitter and one of the better defensive outfielders in the league, was the best ball player on the Athletics. During the past two seasons he had taken over the job of breaking up ball games, a burden carried for years by the fading Bob Johnson. Chapman's departure wrecks what was one of the best outfields in the league.

Okay, Mr. Dooley?

New Yorker Earns a Shot At Cochrane

Harlem Fighter Pounds Out Warning With a Thorough Beating of Zivic

By the United Press

New York, Oct. 31.—Ray Robinson, sensational young Harlem Negro, clinched a shot at the world welterweight crown tonight by outboxing and outfighting former champion Fritzie Zivic to take a unanimous ten-round decision before a sell-out crowd of more than 22,000 fans at Madison Square Garden.

The 21-year-old challenger registered his twenty-sixth consecutive professional victory after spotting veteran Zivic 6½ pounds. This victory not only gives slender Robinson a title match with Champion Red Cochrane in January, but it also avenged Zivic's two triumphs over Henry Armstrong, who was Robinson's idol and friend.

Zivic Battered in Ninth

Zivic took a terrific battering in the ninth round, and it seemed to the roaring crowd that he could not last the distance, but the game Croation never left his feet. There were no knockdowns in the fight.

The early sessions were closely contested, but the young, hard-hitting Negro had a slight edge in most of them. Our score sheet gave Ray seven rounds, Zivic two, and scored the sixth even.

Although Robinson failed to knock out his opponent, his performance tonight answered one big question. The long-legged youngster showed that he can take it to both body and chin. Zivic slowed him up a bit in the second round with a smashing body attack and gashed Ray's right brow, but Ray came back fighting.

Bolo Uppercut Rocks Zivic

Zivic's lone advantage was his superiority in the clinches, where he hammered the tall lad's head from side to side and banged him in the stomach. But on three different occasions Robinson spun his cagy opponent out of clinches and landed hard left hooks to the face as Fritzie was trying to recover his balance.

Zivic, who won the title from Armstrong last October and lost it to Cochrane in July, slowed up somewhat in the closing sessions, but it was a grand fight that pleased the huge crowd.

Robinson scaled 139¼ pounds; Zivic, 145¾.

South Carolina Beats Citadel

By the Associated Press

Orangeburg, S. C., Oct. 31.—The South Carolina Gamecocks came out on the long end of a 13-6 score over The Citadel today after the Light Brigade outplayed the Gamecocks most of the day and almost pulled the game out of the fire in the final period.

Midway the second quarter, with the ball on the Carolina 33, Al Grygo passed 17 yards to Tommy Attaway and on the next play De-Witt Arrowsmith shot one to Quarterback Early Durham, who raced to the goal for the first Gamecock score. The play was good for 49 yards.

Early in the second half, Hank Salvato, The Citadel's triple threat, kicked to Roskie on the Carolina 25. The big fullback gathered in the ball and went 72 yards down the sidelines before Victor slapped him out of bounds on the Citadel 3. He hit the line for two more and Stan Stasica went over for the score.

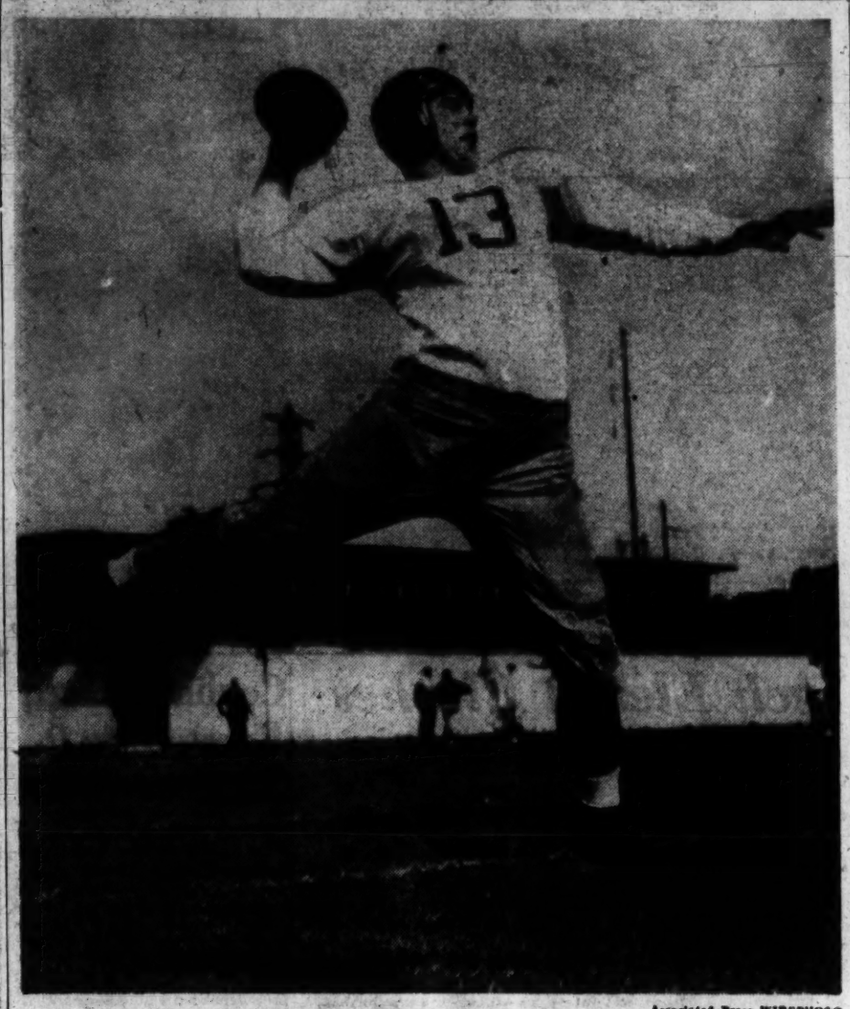
Navy Set for All-Out Battle With Penn



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Although his name doesn't gleam in the headlines very often, Capt. Gene Davis is regarded as the spark of Pennsylvania's undefeated and untied team that meets Navy in Philadelphia today. The 195-pound quarterback has been brilliant in his choice of plays in the Quakers' victories over Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Maryland so far this season

Middie Grid Future In Balance Today; 73,000 to See Game

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Oct. 31.—Navy, with its big guns trained to blast Pennsylvania from the undefeated pigskin ranks, today completed preparations for tomorrow's major tussle to be witnessed by a sell-out crowd of 73,000 at Philadelphia's Franklin Field.

Middie Coach Swede Larson and his gridiron operatives, who participated in a warming-up session today, realize it'll take an all-out effort to wallop favored Pennsylvania—and they're determined to turn the trick.

It's the crucial point in the Sailors' campaign. If they don't turn back the Quakers, they'll drop right out of the football picture. It'll be an uphill battle for the Middies, hurt by injuries and outweighed by the Red and Blue. Navy hasn't won a game from the Quakers since 1935.

Middies on Parade

Two battalions of 1500 midshipmen and high-ranking naval officers, including Admiral H. R. Stark, Washington, Chief of Naval Operations, will witness the do-or-die battle. The Middies will parade 45 minutes before the kickoff, set for 2 p. m.

Larson put the finishing touches today on his rock-ribbed defense, determined to stop Bert Stiff, Penn's line-ripping fullback and super spinner, and Capt. Gene Davis, Quaker quarterback and aerial sharpshooter.

Navy's scoring hopes lie with Barnacle Bill Busik, kicker, runner and passer de luxe, and little Howie Clark, who runs like a shot out of a cannon. They face a powerful Penn line averaging more than 200 pounds.

Both Pennsylvania and Navy have hard-hitting, powerhouse elevens with plenty of reserves to keep on the pressure. The future admirals will not be at full strength because of injuries.

Zechella Is Ready

Zeke Zechella, one half of Navy's "conversion twins," is expected to carry the ball for the first time in a varsity game. Injuries forced him to assume the role of a ball-holder for Bob Leonard, placement kick specialist. But Zeke's leg is all right now and Larson plans to use him as a reserve quarterback.

Meeting of Unbeaten Foes Holds Spotlight; Gophers With Bruce Smith Out, Face Wildcats

By Bill Boni

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Oct. 31.—The college football season heads into the home stretch tomorrow, and does so with a resounding "bang." All eleven of the undefeated and untied major teams will be in action against high-caliber opposition, and at least four of them will play before capacity houses.

Biggest crowd of the day—a sell-out of better than 76,000—will witness the day's only clash between rivals with perfect records, the Army-Notre Dame battle at Yankee Stadium. The East also will have the second-best crowd—74,000 at Philadelphia's Franklin Field to watch all-winning Penn tackle once-tied Navy—while Minnesota's duel with Northwestern, the Gophers' last major obstacle to winning their second straight Western Conference crown, will draw a record-breaking crowd of 64,464 at Minneapolis.

All down the line the schedule is packed with games which, by the margin of a missed signal or an intercepted pass, can go either way. Running down that line, and hoping they go this way, here are this corner's forecasts (home teams first, probable attendance in parantheses).

Minnesota-Northwestern (64,464)—After a losing flyer on Michigan last week, the choice here probably should be Minnesota. The Gophers didn't appear mentally "up" for the Wolverines, and still won. Yet physically they now are not up to par; Bruce Smith, who puts the punch in their attach, is going to be used as a spot player, and Helge Pukema, a valuable cog in their line, is on the shelf. Northwestern has a wealth of backs, their line must

Penn State Overwhelms N. Y. U., 42-0

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 31.—Penn State played a vicious Halloween prank on New York University tonight. Raging up and down the Polo Grounds for six touchdowns in the first three periods to overwhelm the Violets 42 to 0 before a crowd of 10,691.

It was a miserable night, cold and windy, with a drizzling rain falling continuously, a night for goblins to prowl, and Penn State made the most of its opportunity.

The Lions presented a baffling repertoire of reverses and passes and had the advantage of virtually all the breaks in the course of rolling up their big score. Incidentally, it was the third straight shutout for the drenched and shrunken Violets.

A versatile senior from Aliquippa, Pa., Fullback Bill Smaltz, was the principal agent of destruction for the invaders, handling the ball on all of the Lion's many reverses and completing four out of six passes with a slippery ball for a gain of 82 yards.

But Coach Bob Higgins used every one of the 28 able bodied players he brought with him and they all looked invincible against the feeble Violets, who gained only 6 yards in the first half and didn't make a first down until the third period was almost over.

Case Blanks Once Mighty Carnegie, 27-0

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Oct. 31.—The faint ghost of once mighty Carnegie Tech was overwhelmed, 27 to 0, this Halloween night by a driving Case eleven which plowed through a steady rain for its fifth straight gridiron triumph of the season.

The 3240 drenched customers saw Bob Melrett, plunging Case fullback, tally three touchdowns and place-kick three extra points to lead the Scientists in a savage attack which handed the deemphasized Skibos their worst drubbing of a miserable season.

Although Dr. Edward B. Baker's club turned in seven first downs to ten for the Clevelanders, only once did Carnegie display a sustained drive. That was late in the final period when a flock of Case subs went in to get their share of mud.

John Fritz, sophomore left halfback from Blasdell, N. Y., who was practically the entire Tech attack, collected a Case punt on the Carnegie 33. Carrying the ball in a driving rain, he led a drive that went to the Case 24 before it bogged. It was during this drive that Fritz sent an aerial to Bill Johnson which was Carnegie's only completion of 13 attempts.

U. of Miami Keeps Record, Defeats Texas Tech, 6-0

By International News Service

Miami, Fla., Oct. 31.—The University of Miami kept its undefeated and untied record undisturbed tonight, at the expense of a squad of Texas Tech Raiders. A capacity crowd of 25,000 saw the Hurricane push its way to a 6-to-0 victory.

Miami's tally came on a 22-yard pass from Coates to Gorman, who took the toss standing behind the Tech goal. In the closing minutes, Miami beat off a desperate Tech onslaught by holding the Raiders for downs inside their 8-yard line.

Tech, previously undefeated, outrushed and outpassed the Hurricanes, but the Miami team held when the going was the toughest.

'Don't Jitter With Team Says Coach, Hep to Jive

Colonial Slides at the Heels of Clemson Runner

Payne Stars For Tigers At Stadium

Scores 2 Touchdowns To Pace Victory; Small Crowd Watches Colonials Bow Again

By Bill Burnett

Post Staff Writer

George Washington University's unhappy Colonials increased their scoreless-quarter streak to 20 last night at Griffith Stadium, where the clever cleat wearers of Clemson slammed out a 19-to-0 decision before a crowd of less than 5,000.

The day-long drizzle obligingly let up as G. W. went out seeking its second triumph of the season. Instead of that, though, they added a fourth straight beating to a record which also includes a scoreless tie. Clemson, meanwhile, was showing its heels to its fifth foe in six games to date.

The Colonials did quite well by themselves in the first half. They managed to hold their highly favored Southern Conference foes to one touchdown. But in the last two quarters they saw Clemson hang up touchdowns on a 24-yard slant by "Booty" Payne in the third quarter and a 7-yard drive by the same clever runner in the last period.

Colonials Gain Ground

Except for the highly important matter of scoring, G. W. was as good as the opposition. It registered eight first downs to the Tigers' four, picked up 159 yards from scrimmage to Clemson's 123. It tried only six passes and completed none, however. Clemson's aerial record of seven thrown and one completed was little better.

It was the Colonials' unwillingness to pass that had spectators guessing in the final stanza. With a 19-0 deficit already on the board, the Colonials stuck stubbornly to a ground attack as they pushed slowly from their own 31 back to Clemson's 7. What hopes they may have entertained of scoring even one touchdown were doused in a pair of lengthy losses as the game ended.

Despite the defeat, one Colonial managed to shine. That was Johnny Pollock, junior back, who almost single-handedly supervised the late G. W. drive. It was his 24-yard ballet dance down the left sideline that brought the Colonials to the Clemson 7, and it was his short trips off tackle that made even that possible.

Seeking its first homecoming triumph in four years, the Buff and Blue was very much in the game as the last half began. Surprisingly enough it trailed by only 7 points. There wasn't a threat of any sort until late in the third quarter, but then the invaders took a kick on George Washington's 45 and started moving. Four plays they needed to reach the 24, from which point Payne launched his clinching run. End Jack Leonard made a desperate dive at him on the eight but missed.

Clemson's Final Score

A 41-yard sprint by Charley Timmons set up Clemson's final score. That might have accounted for a touchdown itself, except for the clever tackling of Scott Gudmundson, who pulled Timmons down from the rear on the 8. Timmons hit the line once for a single yard, and then handed Payne the scoring job. On both last-half touchdowns Timmons' place kicks were wide.

When the Tigers hung up six points before that game was 2½ minutes old, nobody was surprised. G. W. was supposed to bow by a score ranging anywhere from 30-0 to 73-0. But when that sudden touchdown proved the only one Clemson could get in the first half there were a lot of stunned folk in the stands.

The Colonials received the opening kickoff, moved it from their own 12 back to the 27 under the management of Gudmundson. Twice G. W. cracked at the Tiger line with a profit of only four yards. Gundmundson went back to kick and there the Colonials' trouble started.

Big George Fritts, tackle, rushed into Gundmundson's path, slapped the ball down and took out after it. Scott followed him to the G. W. 15, where he tripped, leaving Fritts no competition as he picked the ball up on the 5 and trotted over. Completing the score, Timmons sent a perfect placement through the posts.

Untimely Cheers

First downs for either team were unheard of until late in the second stanza. Then the Colonials found the key. From their own 20 they measured off three of them, reaching the Clemson 45 before the attack stalled on Graham's two long, thrilling, but very wide passes.

With a muddy Eastern stadium field, a nasty drizzle and Tide forces doing everything in their power to stop him, the 16-year-old Army officer's son accounted for the points that put Western in a tie for interhigh division honors with Central. And it was as near a one-man job as can be perpetrated on the gridiron.

Young Duke launched the winning drive himself, taking Herby Adams' punt on his own 25 and moving it up to the 39 late in the opening period. A nice ovation rose from the throats of 1000-odd drenched fans, but Duke was just starting.

He took the ball under his arm just seven times from the 39, picking up all but 17 of the 61 yards to the goal. Twelve were gained on three bull-like smashes by Bill Goodman, Raider fullback, and the other 5 were contributed by Eastern on an offside penalty. After O'Connell's final 8-yard dash off right tackle, big Ed Widmayer pulled out of the line to place-kick, but the effort was wide.

Both Blow Chances

Before and after that one score, however, neither club was too impressive, except in the kicking department. Before Adams was injured in the second quarter he sent three 50-yard punts into the murky air and then Jesse Newberry took over with almost as much success. O'Connell and Clarence Kuldell, quarterback, handled Raider booting brilliantly despite the slickness of the ball.

Point-making chances were blown by both teams with the greatest nonchalance. Eastern did it first when the game was less than a minute old. Unable to advance with the opening kickoff, Adams quick-kicked deep into Western territory where Henry Pratti slapped at the ball and Tom Kennedy recovered for the Tide on the 19. Four plays, however, moved the ball only to the 13.

At the start of the last period Eastern appeared ready to go with a drive from its own 19 to the 45. There a pass from center found nobody in the backfield waiting for it and "Doc" Boswell covered the ball back on the 19 again.

Fearson's 17-yard sprint on the next play gave the Tide another chance, but center trouble popped up once more. Newberry, back to kick, could do no better than fall on the ball on Eastern's 31, and Western took over.

Quickly the Raiders plowed to the 19, but there fumbleitis hit them, too. Two bobbles in a row found them back at midfield, and after an exchange of kicks the game ended with Western getting nowhere from the Eastern 21.

Navy Jayvees Rout PennState Eleven, 46 to 0

By the Associated Press

Tech Eleven Clashes With Central Today

Game Scheduled at Central at 2:30 P. M.; Home Team Riddled With Injured Players

Though they have tasted defeat in three of their four starts to date, football representatives of McKinley High will be shooting for a thoroughly successful season today when they face Central in the oldest schoolboy rivalry in town.

The game at Central Stadium at 2:30 will be the thirty-ninth clash between the public school foes since 1902, and Tech will be "all out" to trip the unbeaten and untied Vikings. A victory today will earn forgiveness for earlier mistakes and possible losses later on.

Wether Jim Kurz, burly plunger, or Bob Hill, an equally burly end, will get into Central's lineup today is still problematic. The first has missed two of Central's games with a cracked collar bone, and Hill has played only briefly since suffering a slight concussion.

Participation of the above stars will make little difference in Central's favorite role—it still is expected to win as it pleases. The Vikings' forward will is their big threat, just as the weakness of Tech's line puts it in the subunderdog class.

St. John's Routs Roosevelt High, 21 to 6

St. John's scored twice in the second quarter and again in the waning minutes of the game when Buddy Speiss pulled a Rider aerial out of the rain and ran 40 yards to score untouched. Roosevelt's score came after a wide-open assault on the Johnnies as the second half opened.

After the Riders' short-lived attack stalled on the Cadet's 30 after carrying the opening kick-off back 50 yards, St. John's took over. Dick Koester's punt bounded out on the 9 and from there St. John's went 91 yards for the score. Speiss hauled a reverse 20 yards around right end to wind up the drive. George Hughes converted.

Speiss had a hand in the second Johnny touchdown, heaving a 30-yard pass to Al Lucas in the end zone after Roosevelt had fumbled on their own 20.

Highlight of Roosevelt's drive was a 40-yard run from a spread formation by Irwin Lust which put the ball on the 25. A pair of passes from Carl Stugris to Koester made it a first on the 1-foot line, and then Koester crashed over. Sturgis' kick was blocked.

Speiss' touchdown jaunt came late in the last period after St. John's had one touchdown nullified by an offside. Roosevelt elected to try a fourth-down run on their own 10 and the Cadets gained possession of the ball when the try failed to gain. The Johnnies took just three plays to send Tony Chisari over for the touchdown that never made the scoring columns.

Mosconi Wins 6th in Billiard Tournament

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Oct. 31—After losing two straight matches, Willie Mosconi, of Philadelphia, regained a winning touch tonight in the world's pocket billiard championship tourney.

Mosconi scored in only four of the seven innings to beat Ponzi. After the usual break, he scratched, playing safe the next two innings, ran 25, three with a safety, 15 and 84 unfinished to go out.

Ponzi had his own troubles, being minus two until the fifth, when he ran 15 and 21 in the sixth.

Coolidge High Bows, 13 to 0, To Anacostia

Clearly outclassed by a heavier, more experienced Anacostia eleven, Coolidge High's Colts yesterday outgamed and outfought their feared opponents for three periods, only to wilt in the fourth when the Indians pushed over two scores and a conversion for a 13-0 victory at Anacostia.

With the stellar quick-kicking of Dick Beebe setting the Eastern Division leaders back on their heels time and again, Coolidge seemed to have the season's leading upset in the making until midway of the final quarter. Then a rain that had hampered both teams let up temporarily and sheer power, together with some pretty passing by Triple-threat Paul Blaine, ended a 70-yard march in an Anacostia touchdown plunge by Ed Hoffman from 1 yard out.

The Indian offense and defense, after stuttering and stalling up to this point, went into high gear for the remainder of the game. A last-ditch Coolidge passing attack led directly to the second Anacostia score when Hoffman intercepted a toss by the Colts' Weems and galloped 30 yards unmolested to sew up the ball game. Blaine place-kicked the point.

Rolling up ten first downs to none for their opponents, the Indians were never in acute danger of a Coolidge score. But their vaunted attack suffered mainly from three 15-yard penalties and Beebe's quick kicks, one of which traveled 65 yards.

When they did get rolling, however, Anacostia flashed some of the hardest-running backs in the city in Blaine, Hoffman and Bob Nolte, and looked like the champions they threaten to be.

Friends Beats Stuyvesant Again, 37-18

Special Dispatch to The Post

Warrenton, Va., Oct. 31.—Friend's School of Washington took its second successive game from Stuyvesant School, 37—18, on the losers' field here this afternoon. Earlier in the season Stuyvesant bowed to Friends, 27—6.

Early in the first quarter, Lake went through the Friends line and went 50 yards for a touchdown.

Then the Friends' attack went to work and Cotton Smith skirted left end for a score. Shortly afterward, by the passing combination of Smith to Dick Loos, the visitors made two more touchdowns in rapid succession.

Little Hoyas Crushed by Wilson, 34-0

Woodrow Wilson High crushed Georgetown Prep yesterday on the rain-soaked gridiron at Wilson stadium, 34 to 0—the highest score it has ever amassed in its six-years of existence.

This Wilson team looked like a big-league outfit, scoring in every quarter but the last. Then their second team kept Georgetown Prep's first on the run.

The initial score was set up by Dick Schwab's 40-yard return of Steve Crowley's punt which gave Wilson the ball on the Little Hoya 10. Bill Savin, brought eight yards through right guard, and Carl Saine, Wilson fullback, crashed through center for the score. 'Twas then that Tiny Lamb, 280-pound Tiger place-kicking artist, made the first of his four out of five conversions.

Saine Again Scores

In the second quarter a 30-yard pass from Schwab to Capt. Charlie Hardison placed Wilson on Prep's 2-yard line, where Saine again took the ball over. A few plays later Billy Savin, of Wilson, tore through left tackle, cut back nicely and raced 40 yards to another Tiger touchdown.

Savin, on a T-formation play through right guard, scored again in the third. Later in the period this same play through left guard, with Dickie George carrying the ball, gave the Tigers their last six points.

Despite the 34-to-0 defeat, the Little Hoyas chalked up three first downs in the closing minutes of the game. Billy Dunn, diminutive halfback; Steve Crowley, quarterback, and Capt. John Showell, giant tackle, played especially well for the losers.

Bullis Prep And Bethesda Play 6-6 Tie

Taking a six-point edge in the first period, Bullis Prep gridmen clung to the lead until late in their game with the Bethesda Barons yesterday, finally winding up in a 6-6 tie with the strong suburban sandlotters.

Halfback Bancroft registered the opening score on a 30-yard, twisting dash, but Rooney's placement was blocked. After three quarters of heat-to-head play, Bethesda knotted the count on Keene's pass to Mrstik, covering 28 yards. Sam Miller's place kick was also blocked.

Lawrence Earns 9-0 Victory Over G. W.

2000 See Long Islanders Use Breaks To Advantage in Rain-Soaked Game

Special Dispatch to The Post

Alexandria, Va., Oct. 31.—Before a rain-soaked throng of 2000, a burly Lawrence (Long Island) High School eleven capitalized on two important breaks in the second quarter to defeat George Washington High School's gridmen, 9-0, here tonight in the first intersectional contest in G. W. history.

A poor punt that glanced off Curtis Kirby's foot and was downed on the G. W. 33-yard line put the Golden Tornado in position for its first and only touchdown of the contest, while only two minutes later a G. W. fumble deep in the Alexandrians' territory paved the way for a Tornado field goal. Mixed Sarro, a flashy 185-pound halfback, accounted for both scores.

Lawrence marched deep into G. W. territory in the first quarter, but the Presidents held for downs and halted the visitors on the 18-yard line as the period ended. Curtis' kick was recovered by the Long Islanders on the first play of the second quarter and in six plays the Tornado hit pay dirt. A series of spinners, reverses and end sweeps featuring the running of Sarro and Tavalaro gave the Tornado a first down on the 11-yard line and on the next play Sarro swept wide around his right end to score. His placement for the extra point bounded off the goal post and the score stood at 6-0.

Sorrentine Recovers

Two plays after the Tornado kicked off to G. W. Leon Chisolm fumbled and the ball was recovered by Sorrentine on the 18. Three smashes at the sturdy G. W. line gained but a yard, and on fourth down Sarro stepped back to the 20 and booted a beautiful placement from a difficult angle near the west sidelines. Fro mthat point on, the Presidents outplayed the visitors, but their offense was badly handicapped by costly fumbles and intercepted passes. They advanced as far as the 18-yard line late in the second quarter and on several occasions they were in enemy territory in the second half, but their most serious threat expired on the 25-yard line where they hurled four futile passes.

Sarro was the standout in the Lawrence offense, while the Tornados' entire front line turned in a fine defensive performance. G. W.'s sporadic offensives were featured by the running of Leon Chisolm and the pass catching of Curtis Kirby, while Guard Henry Grimm was a tower of strength in the line.

Boys Latin Noses Out Landon, 7-6

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Oct. 31.—The undefeated, unscored-on and untied record which Landon School has nursed through four football outings so far came to a heart-breaking end here today when Boys Latin eked out a 7-6 victory.

It was Halfback Moore's placement after a third quarter touchdown which spelled defeat for the invaders. That effort was tacked on a 3-yard plunge into pay territory by Quarterback Gaines.

Landon opened hostilities with every indication that it would capture its fifth straight game. It took the ball at midfield in the opening quarter, moved in short gains to the 6-yard stripe from which Walter Johnson went over. Cady, attempting the placement that would have meant a tie later on, saw the ball sail wide of the goal posts.

Minnesota, Minus Mainstays, Battles Northwestern Today

Capt. Smith Heads List Of Injured

Gophers Must Rely On Reserves; Crowd Of 64,464 Will See Minneapolis Game

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 31. — Minnesota's football machine, badly battered but still on the Big Ten and national championship highway, will place its hopes on "spare parts" tomorrow as it drives at the barrier that will be Northwestern's title-hopeful Wildcats.

The report on the physical condition of the Golden Gophers is no Halloween goblin's tale cooked up simply to throw the invaders off guard. Missing from the start of tomorrow's classic—to be played before the largest crowd in Gopher history, 64,464—will be Capt. Bruce Smith, brilliant halfback and team sparkplug; Helge Pukema, ace guard; Herman Frickey, star sophomore back, and Tackle Urban Odson. Of the four, only Smith and Odson were expected to enter the battle.

The big hope of an unusually glum Minnesota fandom is that replacements will carry on in the style which has seen the Gophers sweep four games this fall to run their undefeated string to 13 straight. Smith is expected to be run in when a scoring chance comes up, but a twisted right knee will rob Minnesota of a great kicker. Bill Daley, who starts at Smith's left halfback post, is expected to share the kicking chores with Bill Barnaas, brilliant sophomore signal-caller.

Plunkett at Quarter

Minnesota's line will miss Pukema, a brilliant forward on offense or defense whose place will be taken by John Billman. In addition, the Gophers won't have the fulltime services of Odson, who will be wearing a knee brace if he gets into the engagement. His starting place was expected to be taken by Ed Lechner, 200-pound senior.

The weather forecast said skies would be clear, but hinted at the possibility of a rain or snow-wetted gridiron. Heavy going would aid the Gophers, who'll hold a weight advantage, with fast footing measurably aiding Northwestern's open attack built around Otto Graham and Bill De Correvant, both able runners and passers.

In Good Shape

Northwestern, which worked out this afternoon at Memorial Stadium, is in good physical shape. First stringer Tony Samarzia, right tackle, won't play, but Coach Lynn Waldorf has Sophomore Ray Vincent and the veteran 230-pound Leon Cook ready. One Wildcat questionmark was whether Graham, who'll be wearing a guard for a fractured nose, will be handicapped in his passing by the extra equipment.

Minnesota, as the result of the battering suffered in downing Michigan last Saturday, was rated today as hardly better than an even-choice to add Northwestern to it's string. A victory for the Gophers will make them the odds-on selection to down Iowa and Wisconsin and take the Big Ten crown with five wins and no defeats. Northwestern, set down by Michigan, plays a six-game conference card and a win tomorrow will establish the Wildcats as the heavy favorite to take the Conference title.

Since Waldof took over at Northwestern each have won three games. In those six games each team has scored 51 points.

Va. Lightweights Defeat Roanoke 150-Pounders, 12-0

By the Associated Press

Salem, Va., Oct. 31.—University of Virginia lightweights pushed across touchdowns in the first and third quarters to defeat the Roanoke College 150-pounders, 12 to 0, in a sluggish football game on College Field this afternoon.

The game was dull all the way, with the only excitement coming in the third period when Dick Englander snagged a Maroon pass and raced 48 yards down the sidelines for the Cavaliers' second touchdown.

2 Argentine Stars Pace Golf; Snead, Demaret Trailing

By the Associated Press

Buenos Aires, Oct. 31.—Eduardo Blasi and Enrique Bertolino, a pair of Argentine golfers who displayed their shots in the United States a year ago, paced the field of 170 players in the Argentine Open today with subpar scores of 69.

Jimmy Demaret, Texas stylist, finished the first round of the 72-hole medal play with a 72 and gained a tie for sixth with three others. Sammy Snead, the other visitor from the United States, soared to 73.

Federal Duck Stamp Sale Below Normal

Frederick, Md., Oct. 31—Unless there is a stampede tomorrow, State and Federal revenue from duck hunters will be far below normal, officials estimate. With the wild waterfowl season scheduled to be ushered in next Monday, but 50 Federal duck stamps had been purchased at the postoffice here today as compared to 133 last year. The clerk of the court states that the sale of State hunting permits is also under 1940, considering the season opens in two weeks.

Kleinhans, Former Big-Time Pitcher, Now College Student

At 42, Former Baseballer, Goes to School With Son, 18, at Syracuse University

By the Associated Press

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 31.—Ted Kleinhans, former major and International League pitcher who confesses that at 42 he's too old for baseball but insists he's young enough for learnin', is the oldest "freshman" at Syracuse University where he goes to school with his son, Paul, 18, another freshman.

Father and son are after master's degrees in physical education, Paul is a full time student and Ted as a part-timer who plans to make up time with summer courses.

Kleinhans, sr., now a district circulation manager of a Syracuse newspaper, was mainstay on the pitching staff of the Syracuse Chiefs of the International League from 1938 to 1940 and last year, although he made a poor showing on the mound, he held down a coaching job.

Kleinhans spent a year (1936) with the New York Yankees, and was with Cincinnati in 1937 and part of 1938. In 1935, with Newark, he led the International League in strikeouts with 102 to his credit.

A veteran of 14 years in baseball, Kleinhans also pitched for Greensboro, N. C., in the Piedmont League and Columbus and Kansas City in the American Association.

His son, Paul, plays end on the Syracuse freshman football team and another son, Ted, 17, attends Collinwood High School in Cleveland, Ohio, Kleinhans' home town.

Although now selling the headlines instead of making them, Kleinhans has not entirely forsaken his first love, baseball. His office is one block from the Syracuse International League ball park.

Abrams, Zale Fight Nov. 28 For Crown

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 31.—Billy Soose, the ex-Penn State collegian, who has grown to be a big boy now, officially abdicated his end of the world middleweight championship today and thus paved the way to clear up the so-called middleweight mixup for the first time in three years.

As soon as he informed the New York State Athletic Commission he was turning back its sanction as 160-pound ruler, Promoter Mike Jacobs announced a 15-round bout for November 28 in Madison Square Garden between Tony Zale, who is recognized as titlist by the National Boxing Association, and Baby-Faced George Abrams, who three times defeated Soose in non-championship tussles.

Recognized for Title

This fight, the commission agreed, would be recognized for the undisputed world championship, thereby clearing up a fistic fuss that has existed since the New York boxing fathers took their title blessing away from Freddy Steele and gave it to Fred Apostoli for whipping Young Corbett III back in 1938.

Soose has held the New York end of the throne since he outpointed Ken Overlin last spring. And, just to make the picture complete, Overlin sent a letter to the commision today, just after Soose's announcement, that he, too, was unable to make the middleweight limit any longer, and, like Soose, would henceforth campaign among the light-heavies.

Weighs 179 Pounds

Soose not only told the boxing commission he couldn't make the weight any longer, but to prove it he stepped on the commission's official scales and tipped the beam at 179. Therefore, along with his abdication, he also filed a challenge to meet the winner of the light-heavyweight title brawl November 14 between champion Gus Lesnevich and Tami Mauriello of the Bronx. The fistic fathers said this would be given careful consideration.

To take the place of the scheduled November 21 return match between Overlin and Soose, Promoter Jacobs announced a ten-rounder in the Garden with Overlin tangling with another former middleweight (NBA) boss, Al Hostak, of Seattle, on the same card; young Kid McCoy of Detroit and Mike Kaplan of Boston, a couple of leading welterweights, will be together in another ten.

Blaik Pleased With Army's Drill Results

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 31.—The Army and Notre Dame football teams, clashing in th day's only major battle involving two undefeated and untied elevents, will meet at Yankee Stadium tomorrow before an absolute capacity crowd of more than 76,000.

It is traditional for this game to be a sellout. But this renewal of a rivalry that began on West Point's plains in Knute Rockne's playing days was sold out earlier than any other in the past decade, and its trapping generally are reminiscent of the boom days of 12 and 13 years ago.

Army, which hardly figured in the odds at all a year ago and then came up in every sense of the word to outplay the Irish though losing a 7-0 decision, broke precedent this afternoon by working out in the stadium. Coach Earl Blaik sent them through a fast 45-minute drill, and appeared well pleased with the results.

Just as Army is playing in its first year under Blaik, so Notre Dame is in its first season under Frank Leahy. Leahy, as per custom, took his charges to a suburban country club this morning.

Both squads are in top shape, and sophomores are likely to play important roles for each. For the Irish it will be Angelo Bertelli, who has completed 37 out of 62 passes for 571 yards in five games, and for Army Ralph Hill, the New Mexico streak who in 1940 was a mere third-stringer on the Plebe team.

'Fore!' And Briton Chips Incendiaries From Ship's Decks

By the Associated Press

Atlanta, Oct. 31.—Grand Slammer Bobby Jones, who doesn't need one much anyway, has learned of a new use for a niblick.

They're excellent, he found out in a golf round with Capt. A. G. Talbot, of H. M. S. Illustrious, for chipping incendiary bombs into the sea from an airplane carrier's deck.

Capt. Talbot related to Jones how an officer, practicing with a niblick when planes attacked, brought the club into effective use by pitching the incendiaries off deck.

Mrs. W. E. MacIntosh won the weekly Friday ladies' tournament at Army and Navy Country Club with a net 50 over Mrs. D. B. Magruder's net 52. Guest prizes went to Mrs. H. W. Caslore, of Kenwood, with 52, and Mrs. H. B. Smith, unattached, with 58.

76,000 Fans To See Army Battle Irish

Army-Notre Dame (76,000)— The Irish virtually were conceded last year's game, then had to fight like demons to win by 7-0. This is a better Army team, with terrific spirit. But Notre Dame has a great sophomore passer in Angelo Bertelli, who gets fine protection; appears to have an edge in experience and manpower, and gets the call.

Penn-Navy (73,000)—Off showings against their only common rival, Harvard, Penn should be the pick. Stringing with Navy is what appears a toss-up, pure and simple.

Texas-Southern Methodist (23,000)—Texas to keep rolling so it can go bowling.

Fordham-Purdue (35,000)—Against the tough Boilermakers, the Rams would do well to heed Coach Jim Crowley's warnings against any more of these midgame letdowns. Fordham.

Georgia Tech-Duke (20,000)—The Dukes' last big one. If they get by this, they should finish unbeaten and untied. They should.

Boston College-Temple (35,000)—Likely to be close, but Temple.

Duquesne-Villanova (20,000)—Ditto, and Dusquesne.

Arkansas-Texas A. and M. (10,000)—That upset of Detroit should give Arkansas a lift, but the Aggies look a safe bet.

Princeton-Harvard (35,000)—Harvard should baffle the big Tigers, both offensively and defensively.

U. C. L. A.—California (65,000)—In a league where anything can happen and has been happening, U. C. L. A.

Illinois—Michigan (30,000)—Michigan.

Michigan State-Missouri (20,000)—Missouri.

Pitt-Ohio State (50,000)—Well, the Panthers scored last week. Whether they do or not, Ohio State.

Louisiana State-Tennessee (30,000)—Improving; L. S. U.

Baylor-Texas Christian (15,000)—Off the fight they gave Fordham, T. C. U.

Alabama-Kentucky (13,000)—Alabama with fair comfort.

Oregon-Washington State (18,000)—A shade to Oregon.

Iowa-Indiana (35,000)—With Hillenbrand in high, Indiana.

Marquette-Mississippi (15,000)—From that job on Tulane, Ole Miss.

Columbia-Cornell (28,000)—Fast-climbing Cornell.

Kansas-Oklahoma (15,000)—Oklahoma.

Auburn-Georgia (17,000)—Georgia with Sinkwich.

Kansas State-Nebraska (10,000)—Nebraska over punchless State.

EAST—William and Mary to trip Dartmouth, Holy Cross to edge Colgate, Yale over Brown, Maryland over Rutgers, Wake Forest over Marshall, West Virginia over W. and L.

MIDWEST—Detroit over Manhattan, Iowa State over South Dakota, Creighton over Oklahoma A. and M.

SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST—Mississippi State over Southwestern, Virginia over Virginia Tech, North Carolina over North Carolina State, Virginia Military over Davidson.

FAR WEST AND ROCKIES—Washington over Montana, Oregon State over Idaho, Colorado over twice-tied but unbeaten Utah, Denver over Colorado State.

Bryant Undergoes Elbow Operation

St. Louis, Oct. 31 (AP).—Clay Bryant, former Chicago Cubs right-handed pitcher, now with Tulsa, of the Texas League, underwent an operation at St. John's Hospital today for removal of a chipped elbow bone. Dr. Robert F. Hyland, club physician for the St. Louis Cardinals, performed the operation.

Mrs. Bryant said the bone chip was described as "rather large," but that her husband was optimistic concerning the effect of its removal.

Bulla, Goodes Score 66's, Tie In Va. Pro-Am

By the Associated Press

Danville, Va., Oct. 31.—Johnny Bulla, of Greensboro, N. C., and Chicago, teamed with Benny Goodes, Reidsville, N. C., amateur, to tie George Corcoran, of Greensboro, and Amateur Wes Ferrell with four-under-par 66's in a pro-amateur tournament at the Danville Golf Club this afternoon.

Bulla and Corcoran split first and second prize money, amounting to $125, while their amateur partners received trophies. Third place money of $25 went to Henry Styers, 21-year-old Leaksville, N. C., pro, who set a new competitive course record with a sizzling 67.

A total of 18 teams entered the one-day affair.

Wm. Palmer Wins Downs' Race Feature

By the Associated Press

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 31.—Finishing with a great burst of speed in the homestretch, Mrs. Thelma Ott's William Palmer splashed through the slop to an easy victory in today's featured Oakdale Purse at Churchill Downs.

Rosedale Stable's Lake View started out as if to make a runaway of the mile and one-sixteenth event, opening a big early lead with R. G. Whitting's Alcinous in closest pursuit. Nearing the far turn, William Palmer began closing the gap and steering wide into the firmer footing overhauled the leaders to win by four lengths. Lake View, while no match for the winner, easily held the place from Alcinous by six lengths.

Pseudo Keller Is Apprehended In California

Special Dispatch to The Post

Frederick, Md., Oct. 31.—A man masquerading as Charlie Keller, the New York Yankee outfielder, who spends his winters in this city, was unmasked in Oakland, Calif., several days ago to the discomfiture of an insurance agent, who had been promised a large policy; a real estate operator, who was preparing a list of expensive homes for his approval, and a businessman, who had made a big cash advance.

The impostor was tripped up in claiming, during a conversation, he batted third in the Yankee line-up. A sports writer for an Oakland newspaper wired Sheriff Horance Alexander, of Frederick County, as to Keller's whereabouts. The phony was taken into custody when Alexander wired back that Keller was on a hunting trip at Whitesville, N. Y.

Muddle in Huddle

Spokane, Wash., Oct. 31 (AP).—J. W. Taylor will referee no more football this season. Enthusiastically, he bored into a pileup during a high school game. He emerged with a broken leg.

Redskins and Steelers Clash Here Tomorrow

Rain Will Not Hamper Game; Odds Layers Give Local Pros Edge; Titchenal to Start

The Redskins and Steelers both lack the power type runners which give football teams an added advantage in wet weather, thus should tomorrow's rain threat materialize it will make little difference in the pre-game odds. The Weather Bureau's forecast, however, is fair and cooler.

The Steelers only hope for weather help would be a field fetlock deep in mud which is a perfect setting for an upset. And if the Steelers beat the Redskins tomorrow, it will be the biggest form reversal of the pro league season, despite the reported improvement of the cellar club.

Those who like the chances of the Pittsburghers are being offered 10 points at even money. This despite the fact that the Redskins' biggest margin in four straight victories has been four points.

Injuries Hit Steelers

One factor in the Redskins favor is that a team which plays the Bears the week before is never at its best the following Sunday. Although the Steelers came through with their most encouraging performance of the year last week in Chicago, releases from Pittsburgh admit they are in none too good physical condition for their second meeting of the season with the Eastern champions. Washington won in Pittsburgh, 24-20.

Tomorrow afternoon's Griffith Stadium battle, which will see the Redskins pass the halfway mark of the regular season schedule, will find Bob Titchenal at center for Coach Ray Flaherty's club, in place of George Smith. Cecil Hare will remain in the backfield slot in place of the hospitalized Bob Hoffman while either Frank Clair or Ed Cifers will get the starting end assignment along with Masterson.

Probably Out for Season

Hoffman still is confined to his bed in Emergency Hospital and is, undoubtedly, lost to the team for the season. Bill Young, out with a leg injury, will watch another game from the stands this week, but the big tackle may be available next week, or at least be ready for the Bears. Rookie Stuart will take his place as Sammy Baugh's second and fourth quarter club.

Despite the Steelers' record of six consecutive defeats and that its roster includes fewer big-name players than any team in the league, tomorrow's game should draw 30,000 fans to the stadium, given a break by the weather man.

At least, two Steeler players will have a local following, Art Jones, the rookie back from the University of Richmond, who was the sensation of the Virginia schools last year, and Rocco Pirro, who played many a starting game for Catholic University, his now football-less alma mater. Several hundred fans from Richmond and vicinity have made ticket applications in order to watch Jones in the pro ranks.

The Redskins worked nearly two hours yesterday and several team members, particularly Sammy Baugh and Ki Aldrich offered, post-practice help to four members of Staff Cassell's American University squad, Baugh on kicking pointers and Aldrich on the center duties.

Hockey Eagles Victors, 5-4, Over Kingston

By Jack Munhall
Post Staff Writer

Kingston, Ontario, October 31.—Tonight was Halloween and the Washington Eagles had a change of face as they bounced back from last night's humiliating loss to defeat the Kingston Combines, 5-4, before 1,500 exhibition match fans.

Pugnacious Paul Courteau left the fighting to his teammates—notably Bob Lessard—to pace the Washington attack with a pair of goals, including the final marker at 16:01 of the third period, and had an assist. The victory enabled the Eagles to split even on their two-game swing into West Canada.

On a whole the Eagles' performance was heartening to Coach Red MacKenzie and Owner S. G. Severine, who accompanied his players on the trip. Not only did the veterans Courteau, Len Burrage and Art Thompson sparkle but most of all the younger players.

Steve Alberts and Hal Hallowell, a couple of former juniors, performed surprisingly well. Lessard, who is teaming nicely with Burrage on defense, exhibited in the second period the punching that once won him the Quebec amateur heavyweight boxing championship in a brief slugging duel with Kingston's Lou Lane.

DeChard Ends Training for Turner Fight

After eight vigorous rounds DeChard laid aside his gloves and Manager Mann declared his fighter was "never in better shape."

Over at the Arena today Turner will complete his training, starting around 1:30. Turner has been drilling there since last Monday, and Horace Jones has been his sparmate.

Willie Ketchum, trainer of Champions Lou Salica and Lew Jenkins, is due in today to take charge of Turner. Ben (Evil Eye) Finkel has been handling the Texan.

In other sixes, Earl Lowman will face Jabbo Kenner; Mexican Jackie Senna will take on Johnny Yellovich and Oscar Wright will scrap with Billy Bullock.

Lenoir-Rhyne Beaten, 14 to 0

Newport News, Va., Oct. 31 (AP).—The Newport News Apprentice School eleven took advantage of two passes—one its own and the other the opposition's—here tonight to defeat a stubborn Lenoir-Rhyne outfit, 14—0, before 3,000.

The Builders pushed across both touchdowns in the last period. John Perry, Apprentice end, raced 45 yards with a 25-yard aerial from Collie Hanbury early in the period and in the last minute of the game Amos Dobson, sub Apprentice blocking back, intercepted a pass and returned it 53 yards for a touchdown.

Mettlesome, McCreary Up, Wins Janney 'Cap at Pimlico

Brookmeade Colt Pays $25.50 Price

Dawn Attack Second In Feature; My Bill Is Hurt; Four Clubs Killed in Steeplechase

By Walter Haight

Post Staff Writer

Pimlico, Baltimore, Md., Oct. 31.—Two invaders from New York tracks—the Brookemeade Stable's Mettlesome and Jockey Conn McCreary—teamed to win the $2500 added Janney Handicap, featuring today's program. The son of High Strung with the stocky Irishman on his back pounded into the finish ahead of Mrs. Walter M. Jeffords' Dawn Attack. Two lengths farther back came George D. Widener's Overdrawn to be third in the field of eight operating at 6 furlongs. McCreary also rode two other winners on the program.

Those in the crowd of 8000 who backed the chances of Mettlesome collected at the rate of $25.20 for the usual deuce. The track was fast and the Brookemeade gelding was clocked in a creditable 1:11 4-5. The program began under cloudy skies and light rain fell during most of the afternoon.

Dawn Attack broke in front but Early Speed and My Bill went out to set the pace under Jockey Don Meade. Overdrawn and Cape Cod flattered their backers by being in the first flight. Approaching the stretch the real racing began. Mettlesome swung to the outside, passed an injured My Bill to take the lead. Dawn Attack, running in bold fashion, went after the leader. In the final drive, Mettlesome managed to hang on as Dawn Attack continued his drive. Overdrawn staggered into third position.

My Bill was cut down in the running and limped badly on his left hind leg as he came back to be unsaddled. Mettlesome added $2,785 to his earnings for the past year.

The day's steeplechase brought death to Four Clubs, a 5-year-old gelding, and a victory to Caddie, a 3-year-old son of Link Boy. Four Clubs fell at the fifth fence, landed on his neck and failed to stir. Jockey Colonel Brooks, his rider, escaped with minor cuts. Caddie, racing for Montpelier, paid $11.80 and finished in front of Trissino and Sea Fight, two members of the Brookmeade Stable entry.

Paying $12.50, H. P. Metcalf's Star Copy was a driving winner of the fourth race, leading Dixiana's Pinch Hitter to the wire by a length. Third money went to Happy Note in the field of a dozen juveniles going 6 furlongs. Apprentice Jockey Nick Coule engineered the winning effort of the daughter of Trace Call, who carried the light weight of the field. Star Copy was clocked in 1:13 2-5.

Selections at Pimlico

Dear Al:

The $15,000 added Pimlico Futurity, with a field of ten, is the top spot on today's show at Old Pimlico. Bring your dough and see them go. Time marches on and still we haven't heard anything about that "nerving" investigation. Are there too many big-name horses involved or have the political boys got in some licks? With Pictor failing to go to New York to run in the Westchester Handicap, it becomes increasingly apparent that he will be a starter Tuesday in the $10,000 added Riggs Handicap at Pimlico. The W. L. Brann 4-year-old, victorious in the Washington Handicap last Saturday, has been assigned 123 pounds in the Riggs and would be starting at top weight. Haltal, whose brilliant performance in the Pimlico Special brought him the plaudits of racing enthusiasts all over the country, also appears a strong possibility among the starters as he had been allotted only 112 pounds, yet ran Market Wise to a short head. Fortunately for the Woodvale Farm colt, the Riggs weights were issued by Handicappear Charles J. McLennan prior to the Pimlico Special. At least six others among the Riggs eligibles are expected to accept the weights for the mile and three-sixteenths event, with Sir Alfred next on the list at 111 pounds. E. G. Hackney's 3-year-old qualified handsomely for the Riggs by his efforts at Laurel, in the last of which he was a strong second to Pictor in the Washington, Ponty, owned by Francis D. Scully, is due to arrive Sunday from New York to start in the Riggs, for which his weight is 109 pounds. This colt captured the $10,000 Aqueduct Handicap. Lea O'Donnell, trainer of the Tall Tree Stable, may start the speedy Ball Player, whose allotment is 109 pounds. Ball Player worked a mile in 1:41 3-5 this morning, stepping the first half mile in :49 and the three-quarters in 1:14 2-5. The other eligibles that may accept include E. R. Bradley's Bryan Station and Greentree Stable's Corydon, each assigned 110 pounds; Gustave Ring's Ringie, at 109; R. S. Clark's Abbe Pierre and E. K. Bryson's Saguenay II, each at 106 pounds. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—CLINGENDAAL has been doing everything asked and appears the best of those gathered for the day's opener. MR. CANRON has speed and belongs close. WEATHERITE'S last was encouraging and mud would help this one.

Second race—TRELAWNY finished in a dead heat at Laurel and gets only a steadying weight assignment for this. I'm going to string along. FIREBROOM won his last and is a threat. HARD BLAST for the show end.

Third race—ROUGE DEAGON gets in light and should go well. I'm going to put this one on top. GULLIVER II is in good hands and is dangerous. WAR PORT doesn't like this steeplechase course.

Fourth race—IRISH MOON will close with his usual rush in this distance test and I expect him to be up in time to take it all. DANCETTY gets in with a 105-pound assignment and is a threat. MISS BRIDEAUX for the minor money.

Fifth race—JOE SCHENCK wins regularly over this track and is reported fit. The weight suits and I'm going to string along. BLUE TWINK and MY BILL for the place and show. The last named ran yesterday and probably won't be sent back.

Sixth race—The Greentree Stable entry of SHUT OUT and DEVIL DIVER gets the call in the Futurity. Both are top flight juveniles. CADUCEUS and CONTRADICTION should battle it out for part of the money.

Seventh race—MIGHTILY is too sharp to be disregarded. Needs only to run back to those Laurel efforts. SANDY BOOT and LAUDERKIN to fill out the money bracket.

Eighth race—SON ALTESSE gets the best of the weights in this field and needs only an energetic ride. TRANSFIGURE'S last was a beaut and this one gets in light. MISS GOSHEN for the show end.

Best bet—IRISH MOON.

Bill Cunningham's Column

Harvard and Defensive Football

There hasn't been a great deal to holler about Harvard football since the golden era of Haughton, and that means, in round numbers, since the World War. They've been playing, of course, and they've won some and lost the rest, but, except in the memory of some stuffy elderly gaffers, the Big Three and all it stood for, implied and monopolized in gridiron prestige has been deader than Buckley's goat.

Cunmngham

There simply got to be too many Tulanes and Alabamas, Ohio States, Southern Cals, Notre Dames, S. M. U.'s and Washingtons.

But in this year of grace, believe it or be wrong, what the Boston sports columns refer to as "the Crimson shirted Cantabridgians" have come up with a new wrinkle that just could ruin the game of football if all teams everywhere learned the modus operandi. It's strictly dog-in-the-manger football, tanglefoot football, barbed wire football, or, in the Queen's vocabulary, expertly coached defensive football.

Rails Buy Billion In New Equipment

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 31.—America's railroad transportation system, getting ready for the long haul ahead, purchased more than a billion dollars worth of equipment, materials and supplies in the first eight months of 1941.

A compilation made by the magazine Railway Age for its current issue showed that railway buying for the first two-thirds of the year had leaped 59 per cent above the same period of 1940 and that it exceeded any entire year since 1929.

As the defense program expanded throughout the Nation, locomotive and car builders received orders for about $385,619,000 worth of equipment. In the same period the railroad transportation system received by purchase a total of $719,685,000 in materials, supplies and fuel.

"These purchases were principally made before material shortages created by the national defense program became most acute," Railway Age said. "They throw light upon the preparations being made by the railroads for defense traffic" . . .

The orders for new locomotives and cars were larger by approximately $265,000,000, or 210 per cent, than the corresponding orders in the first eight months of 1940 and were larger by $116,096,000, or 40 per cent, than the orders in the same period of 1929.

"As nearly as can be determined at this time," the magazine said, "class 1 railroads had $404,721,000 of materials and supplies on hand September 1, consisting of $34,823,000 of fuel, $24,593,000 of new and second hand rail $53,284,000 of crossties, $280,707,000 of stores stock (consisting principally of materials for the repair of locomotives, cars and tracks), and $11,314,000 of unsold scrap.

"This was about $5,000,000 more fuel than was in stock on August 1, 1941, and about $10,000,000 more fuel than on September 1, 1940. The total reflected about $7,000,000 less rail than on September 1, 1940, and about the same stock of ties, while . . . total inventories were larger by $53,761,000, or 18.6 per cent, than on September 1 of last year."

Bankers attributed the record clearings to the national defense program, increased population and the resultant upsurging in general business here.

Chrysler Net Off; Dividend Of $1.50 Voted

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct 31.—Directors of Chrysler Corporation today voted a dividend of $1.50 a common share.

At the same time the big motor car manufacturing firm announced earnings equal to $6.77 a common share in the first nine months of this year compared with $7.06 a share in the like 1940 period.

The total net profit of the corporation and its wholly owned United States subsidiaries for the nine months was $29,460,848 after charges and Federal taxes compared with $30,706,094 in the first nine months of 1940.

The dividend payment will be made December 12 to stockholders of record November 12. This distribution will bring payments for 1941 to $6 compared with $5.50 in 1940.

The decline in Chrysler earnings this year was accounted for by a provision for increase in taxes for the recent nine months to $23,000,000 from $14,400,000 in the comparative 1940 period.

The company, now one of the greatest manufacturers of Army tanks, disclosed that it intended to reach "all-out" production from its present facilities by the end of the year but that it already had been asked to double its output of medium tanks above original orders.

"This involves," said the company report, "extending the present arsenal and finding additional machinery and other equipment."

Chrysler engineers, it was stated, have designed an arrangement of Chrysler engines for powering medium tanks which soon will be tested.

If this arrangement is successful, the company stated, "it will enable Chrysler to power these tanks by the use of existing facilities and thus employ a larger number of its own workers on equipment which they are trained to operate." At present, most tanks are propelled by aviation engines.

Rails Asked to Cut Steel Rates to Pacific Coast

The Office of Price Administration asked the Nation's railroads yesterday to reduce freight rates in the interest of national defense and for price stability for iron and steel moving on all-rail routes to the Pacific Coast.

Rates proposed by OPA would be graded downward from $1.15 per hundred pounds from Atlantic seaboard points to 75 cents per hundred pounds from Colorado shipping points to all Pacific Coast ports. They would apply to minimum carload weights of 80,000 pounds.

Present rates range from $1.43 per hundred pounds from Atlantic seaboard points to 85 cents per hundred pounds from Colorado. Minimum carload weights now are 40,000 pounds and 80,000 pounds, depending on the product.

The request was transmitted to the Transcontinental Freight Bureau in Chicago, and organizations maintained by the railroads for consideration of freight rates. OPA officials said they acted on behalf of a number of Governmnt departments, including the OPM, the Maritime Commission, the Army and Navy, and the Treasury procurement division.

Shipments of iron and steel to the Pacific Coast from Eastern mills are ordinarily made by boat through the Panama Canal. As a result of the emergency, however, a shortage of freight steamers has compelled increasing use of all-rail service.

Higher freight charges which resulted, officials said, increased the cost of transporting the unusually large quantities of steel now needed for shipbuilding and other needs on the Pacific Coast, and disrupted commercial iron and steel markets in that area.

OPA experts contended their proposal actually would enable the railroads to increase their minimum car-mile revenues on such traffic because of the higher minimum carload weights on which the suggester rates would apply.

Dairymen Lose Fight for Margerine Rehearing

Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt announced yesterday he had denied the petition of the United Dairy Committee, composed of farmers from dairy States, for a rehearing on the standard of identity for oleomargarine established by the Federal Security Agency.

McNutt said he had informed Ralph E. Ammon, director of the Wisconsin State Department of Agriculture and head of the United Committee, that it was "in the public interest" to deny the request for a rehearing on the entire standard.

The committee, in a conference with McNutt September 24, asked particularly for a reexamination of the legal basis upon which he could prohibit the use of diacetyl in oleo under the authority of the Food, Drug and Cosmetics Act.

SEC to Decide on Further Regionalization

The Securities Commission is expected to decide shortly whether to expand the regionalization of its facilities, particularly for the registration of new issues.

Full registration facilities were made available in the San Francisco and Cleveland regional offices of the SEC, beginning February 1, for an experimental period which ended October 1. The commission has been studying the results of the experiment for a month, but has not fully decided what further steps to take.

Informed persons said last night that discussions thus far indicated these developments:

1. Continuing of the San Francisco and Cleveland registration arrangements on a permanent basis.

2. No general extension of registration facilities to other regional offices in the immediate future.

3. Possible expansion of some regional offices—the SEC has them also in New York, Atlanta, Seattle, Chicago, Denver, Boston, Washington and Fort Worth—to provide some of the facilities now concentrated in Washington, especially consultant and advisory services.

Most of the commissioners are understood to be fairly well satisfied with the operation of the regional registration program during the experimental period, but are doubtful that the volume warrants further decentralization of the headquarters staff at this time. The possible effect of the defense program on new and small enterprises—the type of issues most helped by regionalized facilities—was reported to be an important factor.

Trustees Ask A.G.E. Division Into 4 Systems

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 31.—A recommendation that the 26-State utility operation called Associated Gas & Electric Corporation be broken up into four separate systems was made today to Federal District Court by Denis J. Driscoll and Willard L. Thorp, trustees of the bankrupt corporation.

They suggested that 25 of the main operating companies be grouped as:

1. The New York-Pennsylvania System.
2. The Eastern Pennsylvania-New Jersey System.
3. The Western Pennsylvania System, and
4. The Florida-Georgia System.

Others to Be Sold

Such of the corporation's more than 120 operating companies which do not function in those areas, the trustees suggested, would be sold to provide "cash to be used for the reduction of intermediate holding company debt and the financial rehabilitation of the properties proposed to be included in the four systems."

It was suggested it might even be advisable to sell the proposed Florida-Georgia System properties.

The Associated Gas empire long has constituted one of the outstanding financial tangles. It was built up by Howard C. Hopson, who is in a penitentiary as the result of some of his operations, in the space of 20 years. He made it one of the biggest business enterprises in the world.

Vast Extent Cited

Last year, its operating companies sold consumers more than four billion kilowatt hours of electricity, 13 billion cubic feet of gas, nine billion gallons of water and two billion pounds of steam. The subsidiary companies operate street railways, bus lines, and ice factories and conduct real estate businesses.

A Federal court placed the whole system in the hands of the two trustees on March 10, 1940, ordering that immediate steps be taken to untangle its affairs.

In submitting its report today, the trustees told the court they had "earnestly sought a way of realizing the greatest amount possible for claimants against the estate, consistent with a realistic compliance with reasonable present-day standards."

Lull Is Reported In Retail Buying; Weather Better

New York, Oct. 31 (AP).—The general business picture was painted with fairly even strokes this week, Dun & Bradstreet said today in the weekly review.

"Lower temperatures gave some stimulus to consumer spending for seasonal goods," the agency said, "but even better weather conditions combined with special sales apparently failed to produce any show of interest comparable to that of the rush days of August and September.

"Manufacturers as well as retailers continued to note a lull in stock-up buying. Generally, deliveries were somewhat improved. There were still many lines, however, in which demand, although lower, continued to exceed the ability of the industry to meet it. The spread between war and peacetime activity widened steadily, as defense production moved upward while nondefense output declined under the pressure of materials shortages."

The week's total trade turnover was estimated at 10 to 16 per cent above a year ago with increased prices, rather than unit sales, the most important factor. In the major areas the increases were: Pacific Coast, 14 to 20 per cent; Northwest, 9 to 14; Southwest, 13 to 18; South, 11 to 14; Middlewest, 10 to 17, East, 7 to 11; New England, 8 to 13.

Distillers File $15,000,000 Issue

Hiram Walker-Gooderham & Worts, Ltd., (a Canadian company) and Hiram Walker & Sons (an American company) filed jointly with the securities commission yesterday a registration statement covering $15,000,000 of serial debentures, due $1,000,000 annually beginning November 1, 1942, and running through 1956.

The statement said that the debentures would be a joint obligation of the two companies and would be payable in a United States currency. The interest rates were left for later disclosure.

The proceeds will be used for the redemption at 102 per cent on December 9 of $3,747,000 of 4¼ per cent, ten-year convertible debentures of the two companies and toward the payment of certain bank loans incurred jointly.

Warship Sinking Depresses Stocks

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 31.—Torpedoing of a United States destroyer off Iceland, plus further concern over labor and taxes, brought a slide in today's stock market of fractions to more than a point.

The news of the warship sinking was out before the opening and during the first hour prices were only slightly in arrears. Selling volume then picked up substantially for a brief period and declines ran to 3 or so at the worst. Activity soon slackened and setbacks were reduced in most cases at the last.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks finished with a net recession of four-tenths of a point, at 40.4, larges since the flop of eight-tenths on October 16. Transfers totaled 641,490 shares compared with 50,360 Thursday.

Wall Street was more or less prepared for the Atlantic incident, brokers said, in view of the President's recent broadcast announcing the "shooting" had already started. The development, however, inspired many nervous holders to trim commitments pending happenings over the coming weekend.

Bethlehem is Weak

Bethlehem Steel was a soft spot throughout. Some in the financial sector seemed disappointed over the company's third-quarter showing, with taxes bringing a lower pre-share profit than in the September period last year. The stock opened on a block of 1,000 shares, off 1¼. It extended the loss to more than 3 and was off 2½ when the final gong sounded.

Chrysler was down 1¼ on the day and directors later reported third-quarter net of $6.77 a share against $7.06 in the same 1940 months. Taxes, again, received the blame for the contraction, these for nine months amounting to 23 million dollars compared with 14,400,000 in the previous year. The board voted a dividend of $1.50 on the common, the same as disbursed in the two preceding quarters.

Rails were hopeful over traffic and a possible compromise in the wage controversy. Santa Fe was down a point, but small minus signs were the rule elsewhere in this group. Merchandising stocks had the benefit of a steadier retail trend throughout the country and Sears Roebuck was up ¼.

Tobacco List Slumps

American Tobacco common and "B" fell more than a point each to new 1941 bottoms. Year's lows also were posted for North American, Public Service of N. J., Caterpillar Tractor and U. S. Gypsum. Prominent in the slipping division were American Telephone, U. S. Steel, U. S. Rubber, J. I. Case, Texas Corporation, Philip Morris, Eastman Kodak, Westinghouse, Douglas Aircraft, Consolidated Aircraft and International Nickel.

Consolidated Edison, hugging low levels for some time, was one of the few issues able to emerge with a minor advance.

Bonds were irregularly lower and commodities mixed. At Chicago wheat was up ⅜ to ¾ of a cent a bushel, corn unchanged to ahead ½ and hogs off as much as 10 cents. Cotton dipped 45 cents to $1.15 a bale.

Sherwin Williams conceded 4 points in the curb and lesser losers included Aluminum of America, Bell Aircraft, Phoenix Securities and Lake Shore. Turnover here was around 133,000 shares versus 151,000 yesterday.

Hermon Wilson Craven, 80, former United States Civil Service Commissioner and former chief clerk of the United States Senate, died last night at his residence, 4709 Piney Branch Road Northwest, following a long illness.

Mr. Craven was born at Lancaster, Jefferson County, Ind., December 25, 1860, the son of John Gill and Martha Wilson Craven.

He was educated at the State University of Iowa, receiving his A.B., A.M. and LL.B. degrees from that institution.

2 Accept Appointment

Mrs. White Leaves $130,000; Catholic Groups Benefited

An estate of $130,000, a portion of which will go to a number of local Catholic groups, was left by Mrs. Margaret K. White, who died at the Washington Sanitarium on July 11, it was revealed in District Court yesterday in a petition for probate of her will.

Mrs. White was the widow of C. Albert White, Washington attorney, and lived at 3161 Eighteenth Street Northwest. In addition to the religious bequests, she also left $2000 to her maid, Ethel Bogins, in reward for long and faithful service.

Bequests to institutions included $1000 to St. Elizabeths Hospital, $2000 to Mount Hope, $2000 to St. Ann's Orphan Asylum, $1000 to the Little Sisters of the Poor, $300 to the Perpetual Adoration Convent at the House of the Good Shepherd, and $500 to poor parishes for 500 masses for her husband and herself.

The will also directs that ten shares of American Telephone and Telegraph stock be given to the Rev. John Spence, of St. Anthony's Church, when he has completed 100 masses for her husband and herself. It also stipulated that certain jewelry be given to Father Spence for the chalice for his daily mass.

Provision also was made for numerous relatives and friends. The petition was made by Remick S. Ferguson, of the Washington Loan and Trust Co., and Robert Layng, a friend of Mrs. White. Debts of the estate will total about $1000, the court was informed.

Defense Housing Wins Praise

In the face of caustic criticism by both Congressional agencies and Administration officials of the conduct of the Government's defense housing program, a subcommittee of the House Buildings and Grounds Committee yesterday pronounced results obtained "first-class, efficient and workmanlike" and "about 95 per cent successful."

In a public statement of subcommittee findings in a Nation-wide inspection of housing projects, Representative Boykin (Democrat), of Alabama, the chairman, declared "additional funds for immediate expansion of housing facilities" to be a "dire necessity."

Boykin said the subcommittee is convinced "that the volume of defense housing has not kept pace with the volume of defense manufacturing that requires the dislocation of thousands of workmen to places where homes are not available."

The chairman declared that his statement represented the unanimous verdict of the subcommittee which will make a complete report to the full committee Tuesday.

A select committee investigating national defense migration last week urged reorganization of the Office of Defense Housing Coordinator while only last Wednesday Nathan Straus, United States Housing administrator, charged before a Senate committee that the housing program has suffered "criminal" delay because of "interference" by Housing Coordinator Charles F. Palmer.

Boykin declared that Palmer "has programmed the necessities well, and that the plans for future housing to be built in accordance with future appropriations will be equally well distributed."

"We aren't relying on second-hand information in making this statement," Boykin declared. "We have seen the proof of it with our own eyes, and we have searched every angle of the defense housing situation carefully, personally, and on the spot."

Whenever possible, the statement said, private capital should be "enticed" into financing home construction, adding that "the Government should extend the use of its priority facilities for the benefit" of commercial development.

The subcommittee urged greater care in the selection of sites and that cities be made payments in lieu of taxes on a scale "in relation to a fair taxable value." No more than 15 per cent of rents may now be assigned in lieu of taxes.

TERRIBLE NEWS! SLEEZ — THE LAST OF THE "SCIENTISTS OF SUDDEN DEATH" — HAS FAILED AND MET HIS DOOM!
THEN — THEN YOU THINK IT BEST WE DROP OUR ATTEMPTS TO DESTROY SUPERMAN?
NO! — THIS ONLY MEANS THAT NOW IT'S UP TO YOU AND ME TO MAKE THIS LAST AND FINAL ATTEMPT TO RID OURSELVES OF THE MAN OF STEEL!
BUT I'M SICK OF THIS CONNIVING AND USELESS EFFORT TO KILL SUPERMAN. BESIDES, I — I'M NOT CERTAIN I WANT TO SEE HIM DEAD, AFTER ALL.
HAVE YOU FORGOTTEN YOUR FATHER'S DEATH SO SOON? HAVE YOU TOSSED ASIDE YOUR VOW OF VENGEANCE JUST BECAUSE OF A FOOLISH INFATUATION FOR YOUR FATHER'S MURDERER? SUPERMAN MUST DIE.... YOU OWE IT TO YOUR FATHER'S MEMORY!
YOU'RE RIGHT — I'LL — I'LL DO ANYTHING YOU SAY
THAT'S BETTER — I HAVE A SUPERB PLOT FOR SUPERMAN'S DESTRUCTION THAT CAN'T FAIL. BUT THE FIRST MOVE WILL BE FOR YOU TO APPROACH LOIS LANE AND ASK HER TO INFORM SUPERMAN YOU WISH TO GIVE HIM INFORMATION REGARDING A VAST CRIMINAL PLOT OF NATIONAL SCOPE....!

Listen! with Glynn

With so much talk going on these days about different sections of the country having opposing views on what the United States should do about the war—the generally expressed theory being that the South and East are strongly interventionist, while the Middle West is supposed to be just as violently isolationist—Lyman Bryson, of the Columbia network's "People's Platform," has decided to find out once and for all.

So tonight he's putting on his discussion forum from the Middle West, having as his guests people from all walks of life who should be able to give an able opinion on how people in general there feel about things. Whether their views will be any different from those in other sections of the country remains to be seen. The broadcast comes from St. Louis, Mo. Another is scheduled from Chicago next Saturday night.

Tonight's speakers are to be a professor of political science, an attorney, a farmer and a clubwoman. The professor is Dr. Paul G. Steinbicker, of St. Louis University. The attorney is Kenneth Teasdale, former president of the St. Louis Bar Association and now secretary of the local Committee to Defend America. The farmer is Thad Snow, a planter from near Charleston, Mo. The clubwoman is Mrs. Henry Frost Chadeayne, a member of the St. Louis America First Committee. The broadcast will be heard over WJSV at 7 p. m.

Contract Bridge

We present today's two questions on bidding and play for those who like their bridge without criticism. Whether or not they are answered correctly, no comment will be made.

The bidding has gone:
What do you make?

1. East would be wise to pass, even though he holds two aces opposite an opening bid. He cannot raise partner's suit as his trump support is not adequate and he has no suit of his own to mention. One no trump, the response he could have made had not North overcalled in spades, is now out of the question, as East lacks a spade stopper.

2. North's hand is strong enough for a bid after West passes East's opening bid. A takeout double is preferred to a two-heart overcall; North's hearts are not too good and he has support for both minor suits. South will know that a takeout double which reopens the bidding isn't so strong as one made under other circumstances. The double instead of the overcall prevents partner, holding a poor hand and no trump support, from being forced to rescue, in diamonds or clubs, at the three level.

New Trial Denied For Assailant Of Girl, Soldier

A motion for a new trial for Roland J. Lindsey, 19-year-old Negro, who was convicted on October 10 of attacking a local girl last summer and slashing the throat of her soldier escort, was denied in District Court yesterday by Justice Jesse C. Adkins.

Lindsey was sentenced by the justice to electrocution on February 6, the same death date which was set in another court for Jarvis Catoe, for his assault on the girl. He also was given, as a matter of formality, a sentence of from 5 to 15 years for his attack on the soldier.

His attorneys, James G. Tyson and Richard R. Atkinson, stated that they would appeal the case within 90 days.
